One executive member said yesterday: "Arthur may have been cleared of using money from Libya or elsewhere for his personal gain, but his grip on this union has got to be weakened. He must be brought under control."

SCIENCE EDITOR

ASSUMPTIONS about the origin and spread of Aids could today be overturned by a report which reveals that the disease was present in Britain in 1959, more than 20 years earlier than was previously believed. Indeed, it was not until 1981 that United States researchers writing in the New England Journal of Medicine described the first case of a newly recognised disease that was soon to become known as Aids.

A re-examination of patient records and tissue specimens by virologists at Manchester University medical school shows that a former Royal Navy seaman, aged 25, died of fullthe latest issue of The Lancet. Andrew Bailey, one of the researchers, said: "Taking into account the incubation time of several years between infection and development of the full-blown disease, the scaman would have contracted the virus in the persistence of George Williams, one of the researchers. He is a Manchester pathologist who carried out the original post-mortem examination of the sailor's body. He reported the case in The Lancet at the time, describing it as a death unique to his experience of meumonia accompanied by overwhelming complications and secondary infections.

Dr Bailey said this raised questions about the early prevalence of the disease, adding: "It also demolishes the idea held by some people that the Aids virus could have been a manmade, genetically engineered organism released accidently or deliberately from the laboratory.

He reminded his colleagues of the similarity to Aids when the disease became officially recognised and asked if they could re-examine the case. The only physical remnants, unfortunately, were samples of tissue stored in paraffin blocks. Dr Bailey been available. The earliest accepted case of human blood serum with antibodies indicating that the donor was HIV positive was a sample taken in Zaire in 1959. Diagnosis of the sailor's Aids became possible through a new technique of analysis called the polymerase chain reaction (PCR), which is revolutionising research in genetics and molecular biology. In half and hour, using the new technique, millions of identical copies can be produced of a single piece of DNA, the basic genetic material which lies at the heart of each cell in the body, which was previously far too small to

Painstaking process of seeking political progress in Ulster

By EDWARD GORMAN

IRISH AFFAIRS CORRESPONDENT THE Brooke initiative aimed at devolution in Northern Ireland is the latest in a string of attempts at a breakthrough in the political deadlock by successive governments since the imposition of direct rule over Ulster 18 years ago.

In 1973, the Conservative government under Edward Heath attempted to set up a power-sharing administration based on a 78-member assembly elected with proportional representation. Talks towards the end of the year involving Unionists led by Brian Faulkner, the home affairs minister in the last Stormout administration, the Social Democratic and Labour Party and the Northern Ireland Alliance Party, brought agreement on an executive.

The approach for the coalition that took office in January 1974 was hammered out at a conference at Sunningdale, Berkshire, attended by leaders of the executive parties, British ministers, led by Mr Heath, and Irish Republic ministers, led by Liarn Cosprave, the property of the executive the prime minister. The executive was quickly brought down by a Loyalist strike which within five months had led to the resignation of the executive's Unionist members and to its collapse. In July 1974 the Labour govern-ment under Harold Wilson tried to find a replacement for the assembly, with a 78-member constituThe experiment failed the follow-ing year. Roy Mason, Northern Ire-land secretary in the Callaghan government, put forward pro-posals for discussions with the parties, but made little headway.

The advent of a Conservative overnment in 1979 was a chance for a new approach, with manifesto commitments for a devolved regional council prepared by the late Airey Neave. After his murder, however, there was a change of

In 1980 the government prepared a dual strategy, exploring the potential for devolution through discussions with the parties at a constitutional conference under Humphrey Atkins, and also entering into contact with ministers in a British-Irish intergovernmental council in 1981.

By 1982, under James Prior, a determined effort to promote political progress was under way in the province. Mr Prior eventually chose a limited approach known as rolling devolution, with a 78-scat assembly, again based on propor-tional representation, but initially limited to a role only in con-sultation and scrutiny.

The scheme, launched with an election in October 1982, did not appeal to Unionists, who rejected what they saw as a revival of 1973style power-sharing. The SDLP boycotted the assembly, and the Irish government, then as now under the stewardship of Charles Dublin, which led to the creation of Haughey, regarded rolling devolution as unworkable. The assembly was dissolved in June 1986, crippled by nationalist abstention, and Unionist protest over the Anglo-Irish agreement, signed by Margaret Thatcher and Garret FitzGerald, the previous year.

Since then the political life of the province has been virtually mori-bund with violent Loyalist protests at the agreement giving way to apathy. Tom King, Mr Brooke's predecessor, can take considerable credit for the progress made this year, a point not lost on Mr Brooke, who praised him in the Commons yesterday. By the time Mr King left for the Ministry of Defence last summer he was expressing guarded optimism over prospects for political progress after his "talks about talks" with James Molyneaux, of the Ulster Unionists, and Jan Paisley, of the Democratic Unionists.

It appears that the Unionist leadership has accepted that a more palatable arrangement can be reached only through negotiation. In the meantime - and this, according to its supporters is the agreement's main achievement so far — they have accepted the Dublin dimension in any new deal. Mr Brooke, a new face with an instinctive understanding of the province's politics, has painstak-ingly maximised his opportunity.

It is understood that the dministrators will claim that gold bars worth millions of pounds that belonged to Lady llingworth were never found after police uncovered the plot to steal from her between 1984 and 1986. The impending legal action by the administrators is to be defended by the baroness, aged 55, her former husband and the three children.

Judges sentence tree to death

By ROBIN YOUNG

THE Court of Appeal yesterday sentenced an elegant 150-year-old horse chestnut tree to death.

The judges, led by Lord Donaldson of Lymington, Master of the Rolls, had been asked to grant a reprieve for the 100ft leafy giant which has grown and flourished for a century and a half in St Paul's Shrubbery, Islington, north

They decided against sparing the tree without requiring to hear counsel for the man who had fought for years to have the tree cut down on the grounds that it was encroaching on his property and knocking down a wall.

Lord Donaldson, sitting with Lords Justices Gibson and Taylor, dismissed arguments by the tree's owners. Islington borough council.
The council had pleaded that its beauty and value to the local scene should override the complaints lodged by the neighbouring owner, Peter Elliot, of St Paul's Place, Canonbury. The council, represented by Jeremy Sullivan, QC, was appealing against a High Court order that the tree should be cut down. The Court of Appeal judges ordered the authority to fell the chestnut within 28 days and to pay the costs of the case, estimated at £20,000.

Lord Donaldson suggested that if the council wanted a tree in that general position it could plant another mature specimen far enough away from Mr Elliot's property not to cause complaint.

Last night, the council said that it had always been willing to pay to rebuild the wall around the tree. It said that it was anomalous that a tree could be protected by preservation orders from its owner, but not from owners of neighbouring properties who claimed that the tree affected their property adversely.

Mr Elliot refused to comment on the ruling of the Sales of new cars are down by 18%

By KEVIN EASON

CAR sales slumped by 18.3 per cent last month, underlining the reversal in fortunes suffered by manufacturers after last year's record profits.

Registrations in June fell to 142,697, compared with 174,667 in June 1989. Sales in the first six months of the year totalled 1,066,052, a drop of 10.9 per cent on the first half of 1989.

Although June and July are traditionally the low point of the sales year, before the August change in registration plates, manufacturers fear the slump in spending, a result of high interest rates, may lead to greatly reduced profits.

Companies have been cutting prices dramatically and offering low loan rates to woo customers. Nissan, for example, has cut prices by £1,000 and more. Ford has also reduced prices and is offering free insurance for the Fiesta and Escort.

Although 20 per cent of the year's sales take place in August, next month's figures are likely to be much lower this year.

However, the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders said: "August could turn things right round again. Some dealers are reporting enormous interest from the public in the new H

Schools urged to spend more time teaching pupils

By DAVID TYTLER, EDUCATION EDITOR

SCHOOLS should spend from 21.7 to 25.4 hours in more time actually teaching secondary schools. their pupils, John MacGregor, the education secretary, said yesterday. He issued new guidelines to all state schools in England and Wales asking them to ensure minimum teaching time.

The minister has told school governors and head teachers to provide at least 21 hours a week for pupils aged between five and seven, 23.5 hours for children aged between eight and eleven, and 24 hours for 12 to 16-year-olds. Recent reports by government inspectors show that teaching time varies from 19.9 to 23 hours a week in primary schools and

Parents in language protest

ENGLISH-speaking parents are considering legal action against a Welsh council's policy that all primary school lessons in some rural areas should be taught in Weish (David Tytler writes).

They have formed an action group called Education First in Primary Schools to change the Welsh-only policy in-troduced last September for schools in traditionally Weishspeaking areas of Dyfed.

A spokesman for the county council said the policy would be reconsidered after protests from parents. School governors will hold meetings to give the county's 25,000 parents of 4-11 year olds a chance to express their views.

One mother, Blodwen Griffiths, said: "If all other avenues fail we will have to take this issue to the European Court of Human Rights.'

Mr MacGregor said he did not believe the school day needed to be extended but that schools should make better use of the time, perhaps cutting back on assemblies, break times, registration and supervision. He said the inspectors had reported that teaching time in some schools was insufficient to cover all the lessons required by the National Curriculum. In 1987, more than half the country's 20,000 primary schools provided at least 23 hours of lessons a week, with 15 per cent providing more than 25. However, more than a quarter taught less than 22 hours and 10 per cent offered only 20 hours or less. Thirty per cent of the 5,000 secondary schools in 1988 provided tuition for at least 25 hours, but half taught for 23 hours or less and 5 per cent gave classes for no more than 22 hours. Nigel de Gruchy, general secretary of the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers, said: "Teachers are still under too much pressure and are likely to feel insulted by

Education aide denies misusing influence

By OUR EDUCATION EDITOR

AN ADVISER to a mi was accused by the Labour party yesterday of using his influence to gain special treatment for a private college in which he has a financial interest. Last night the charge was denied by the government.

Jack Straw, Labour's front bench spokesman on education, told a committee of MPs that he had received an anonymous letter from an official in the education department claiming that Sir Cyril Taylor, a special adviser to John MacGregor, the education secretary, had misused his influence. Mr Straw said that the official claimed that Sir Cyril, who is also chairman of the City Technology Trust, had persuaded the department to undertake a special inspection to grant approval of a master's course in business administration at the American-owned Richmond International College in Surrey. He was chairman of the trustees and a shareholder in the company. Robert Jackson, the minister responsible for higher education, told the committee that it would have been quite proper for Sir Cyril to have approached the government but he had not.

Mr Straw claimed that the inspection by three senior academics and two inspectors ran counter to the usual procedure. Mr Jackson said that the procedure had been used before.

Sir Cyril said last night: "If Jack Straw repeats these allegations of corrupt behaviour outside the privilege of the House of Commons I will issue proceedings for libel. I have never approached ministers about Richmond college."

Fixed rate mortgages are good news for first time buyers. With your mortgage payments fixed in advance, no matter what happens over the next five years you'll know where you are each month! And it could mean considerable savings. For example, on a £40,000 mortgage, with our fixed rate, plus the low start option, you could save £167.71 per month in the first year. Your payments per month will be £249.38 instead of £417.09. Then over the next few years your payments gradually increase as the effects of the low

Gallery seeks curb on traffic

By SIMON TAIT

THE National Gallery is hoping to persuade the government and Westminster city council to pedestrianise the north side of Trafalgar Square in the next ten years.

Lord Rothschild, chairman of the trustees, said that talks had been held with the council and the Department of the Environment. "It can be a nightmare for visitors to the gallery fearing for their lives as they enter and leave between tourism buses and moving traffic," he said.

However, no big campaign for the scheme would be launched by the gallery until after the £30 million Sainsbury wing opens next spring. The original 1838 building is undergoing major refurbish-ment, with £12 million being spent on it this year alone, but the Trafalgar Square main entrance refurbishment may have to wait until the pedestrianisation issue is decided.

Yesterday, the gallery, which last month announced the loan of one of the biggest private collections of 19th and 20th century paintings, the Berggruen collection, an-nounced the bequest of still more important works. The late Kenneth Levy, a London stockbroker, and his wife, Helena, have left it a group of five paintings worth up to £12 million. It consists of a Monet, a Renoir, a Corot, a Boudin and a Jongkind.

Neil MacGregor, director of the gallery, said: "The Levy Monet, in particular, Museum at Le Havre, is of very great importance and the kind of painting it would be impos-sible for us to acquire in any other way."

The gallery also announced the biggest-ever exhibition of Rembrandts, to open in the new wing in 1992.

Major worried by level of credit

CONCERN at the level of credit still being advanced by the lending institutions was expressed by John Major, Chancellor of the Exchequer, at

He told MPs. "The volume of credit being advanced at the moment is still higher than I would wish to see. That does mean we will have to retain the level of interest rates higher than otherwise it would be."

However, he told MPs that there had been some encourag-ing signs of the institutions taking scriously his warning of last month on the marketing of

So far as lenders were con-cerned, the prime difficulty did not lie with the banks and building societies, but elswhere. Sir Robert McCrindle (Brentwood and Ongar, C) asked if he was concerned by the recently issued figures indicating that credit was still far from under control. Would he consider the possibility of requiring the banks and building societies making special deposits with the Treasury, thereby limiting their Treasury, thereby limiting their opportunity to encourage people to engage in irresponsible credit taking?

Mr Major said that special deposits might put up, rather than reduce, interest rates. That was difficult territory to get into. Robert Sheldon (Ashton-under-Lyme, Lab), chairman of the public accounts committee, urged him to think more seriously about the possibility of introducing proper credit con-trols. That would be better than continuing to rely on a weak form of exhortation.

Mr Major said he did not believe credit controls would be remotely effective in a deregu-lated economy without ex-change controls.

● A complaint from a scaior Conservative MP about the poor quality of the new £5 note received a sympathic response from Mr Major during Com-mons questions.

Terence Higgins (Worthing, C) said: "We may be giving the impression that our currency is declining in value faster the that of others because of the appalling, poor quality of the paper used in the new £5 note".

Mr Major should ensure that a proper quality of paper was used and that there would be no harmonisation with the quality of paper used in other European currencies, which had always been far poorer.

There should be exemptions from registration. Those who were responsible and looked after their dogs would have to pay for the policing of those who had not been responsible. Police dogs and dogs being trained for the blind should be exempt.

Lord Hailsham of St Maryle-bone said that dogs were companions of the lonely, the old and the poor. These groups could be called upon to pay a registration fee of £25. To stop the old, lonely and the poor from having dogs was cruel.

'Sovereignty for 15 minutes'

By NICHOLAS WOOD POLITICAL CORRESPONDENT

BRITISH sovereignty over interest rates will boil down to a 15-minute wait before following the lead of a European central bank if the government continues to re-sist the Delors proposals for economic and monetary union, Sir Leon Brittan says today in a pamphlet.

In a direct assault on Margaret Thatcher's contention that monetary union would involve Britain's surrender-ing control over domestic monetary policy, the vice-president of the European Commission argues that the scope for independent action by the British government is already severely limited and will become more so once European Community countries have decided to embrace the single currency and a central

Sir Leon points out in a paper published by the Thatcherite Centre for Policy Studies that when the Bundesbank raised interest rates last autumn, the Chancellor of the Exchequer followed suit within 30 minutes, even though theoretically the government had retained full sovereignty over monetary policy by holding out against full membership of the European monetary system. "Does anyone in this country believe that when there is a common currency for much of Europe, British

Sir Leon dismisses the government's plan for a "hard eca" operating in parallel with the present European Commun.

He argues that it would still impose transaction costs on business, would lessen the role of national currences in a potentially anarchic way, aid to infla-tionary pressures and divert attention from the real need for structural change in uncompetitive economies.

> Moi: now running out of patience with opponents

From Christopher Walker IN NAIROBI

AS THE Kenyan crackdown against pro-democracy campaigners continued with more arrests yesterday, it was disclosed that the chief of the general staff has ordered members of the armed forces to shun politics and warned them that they may be called on to defend the one-party government of President Moi.

Lieutenant-General Haji Mahmoud Mohammed, a staunch Moi loyalist who played a leading role in putting down the abortive air force led coup in August 1982, also attacked accounts of the current high-tension broadcast by Western radio stations and reported by an increasingly shackled Nairobi

The general told 400 officers and soldiers returning from a 15-month tour of duty in Namibia: "Our job is to defend the country and the constitutionally elected government of President Moi. We stand firmly by this commitment. If and when necessary, the army can be called upon to assist in the maintenance of law and order."

His speech, delivered only hours before groups of plain-clothes sec-urity agents seized two former cabinet ministers who have been leading the campaign for a multiparty state, was taken as proof that Mr Moi is preparing to deploy all elements in his ruthless internal security network to clamp down on dissenters. The drive against his autocratic conduct of government is being pursued by a loose alliance of lawyers, politicians and churchmen who have been the victim in recent days of an intensive exercise in harassment combined with a propaganda campaign alleging they are trying to subvert the country by paying Kenyans to call for an end to single-party rule.

In a parallel with pre-revolutionary Romania, the pro-democracy campaign has its roots in remarks by a dissident cleric, the Rev Timothy Njhoya, a Presbyterian minister who used a New Year's day address to urge Africans to reflect on the example of Eastern Europe and opt for multi-party systems. Yesterday radical lawyers hose offices are under constant surveillance began moves to determine the position of the two arrested former ministers, Kenneth Matiba, who once held the portfolio of transport and communications, and Charles Rubia, formerly the first African mayor of Nairobi. Under recently amended laws, they can be held for 14 days without trial instead of 48 hours as before. Their supporters are growing concerned they may eventually share the fate of J. M. Kariuki, the populist opposition figure murdered at the behest of the security forces in 1975.

One of the opposition lawyers, Gibson Kuria, warned that Kenya was fast approaching "a Roma-nian-type explosion. Moi is like Ceausescu, and his party, the Kenyan African National Union (Kanu), is like the Romanian Communist party. They are running a country in severe economic trouble where the government is not accountable. Also they are not prepared to reform. If they do not do so, the people will rise up."

Mr Kuria, aged 43, shrugged off the threats of death and detention which are now regularly directed against anyone joining the campaign to end the one-party system formerly enshrined in law in 1982, but operating in practice long before that. He has already served nine and a half months' detention without trial for supporting the publication of what was decreed as subversive literature.

He claimed: "The civil service has lost its independence, so has the attorney-general and the auditor-general, who can both be dismissed by the president under amendments he made. Also, we now have the ridiculous system of queuing to nominate parlia-mentary candidates which is a complete mockery of democracy.

"Under the rules, delegates at a Kanu nomination meeting must queue in front of the candidate of their choice to indicate their support. If one of the candidates all Kanu members, of course receives 70 per cent or more support from those attending, he is then automatically elected a member of parliament . . . All the junior civil servants dutifully line up in front of a man they have been instructed to back."

Official sources said that police and army units had been given special orders to mobilise in the early hours of Saturday to prevent any citizens reaching the venue of tomorrow's banned rally in Nairobi, which was planned as a high point in the campaign for an end to ited. In a remarkable allegation widely publicised yesterday, President Moi claimed that supporters of a multi-party system had offered 500,000 Kenyan shillings (£12,500) to "anyone willing to get killed" at the illegal meeting. He earlier alleged that the organisers were planning to have demonstrators shot and blame the deaths on the security forces.

Mr Moi was reported to have told a women's meeting in State House here yesterday he had been too lenient with the pro-democracy campaigners and was now "running out of patience" with them.

The atmosphere of mounting official hysteria about the banned meeting — which may now never take place, despite the support for it still voiced privately by many ordinary Kenyans - was increased by another report in the Kenya unnamed government official as accusing supporters of multi-party government of claiming that Robert Ouko, the murdered former foreign minister, would mysteri-ously "reappear" at Saturday's meeting and of using the claim to try to tempt people to attend.

The official, who condemned the organisers as "sons of darkness", said they were claiming to their supporters that the former minister, who was murdered in February and whose brutal death was the subject of a so far unpublished Scotland Yard investigation, had not in fact died but had been spirited into hiding abroad and would return to address the gathering and lead opposition to Kanu.

According to Western security sources, the Scotland Yard inquiry led by Detective Superintendent John Troop has implicated the Kenyan security forces in Dr Ouko's disappearance and murder. The report - which is believed to have been dispatched to Kenya but not yet published - is said to have proved from forensic evidence that the minister did die after disappearing from his farmhouse on

Mr Rabin, aged 68, is a native of Jerusalem and was a protégé of Golda Meir, the former Israeli prime minister. He was army chief of staff during the 1967 Middle East War in which Israel seized the West Bank, Gaza Strip and Golan Heights from neighbouring Arab countries. Mr Rabin said this week that the Labour party must change if it wants to shed its "loser's image". "Within the Labour party today, many people would like to see the party now take all the decisions, make all the choices so that we will be ready as soon as possible to, first, formulate our policies on the major issues ... and, second, to decide who will lead, not just before the elections." He said he felt he was a good candidate for the top post because he was more acceptable to "the moderate right" As he put it: "Without winning voters from the moderate right, we will not achieve it (victory), and this is one of the reasons I have decided to

The polls appear to favour Mr Rabin. A survey earlier this month of 1,100 Jewish adults by the Hebrew daily, Hadashot, showed that 24.2 per cent of those polled preferred Mr Rabin as prime minister, compared with 11.2 per cent for Mr Peres. Yitzhak Shamir, the current Likud prime minister, was supported by 20.4 per cent.

Still, Mr Rabin has liabilities. Many in Israel remem-ber the financial scandal that forced him to turn over the party leadership in 1977 to Mr Peres.

There also have been allegations in recent weeks that Israeli army brutality in putting down the intifada was ordered by Mr Rabin; an early directive instructed soldiers to "break the bones" of rioters.

Minister pays the price and resigns

From James Bone IN PARIS

DIALOGUE 2000 was the sort of symposium that French government ministers love to hold. Organised this week in Paris by Olivier Stirn, the three-day conference dealt with the weighty subject of the future of the French left.

The tourism minister had worked hard for the greater glory of the government, and an array of Socialist party grandees promised to put in an appearance for the sake of the public and the television cameras.

There was only one problem the public was missing.
 About 30 people attended Monday's opening session but by the afternoon the number had dwindled to around ten. Faced with the French public's complete apathy towards politics, a reality underlined repeatedly by low election turnouts, M Stirn's aides stooped to the politically unacceptable and quietly opted for rent-a-crowd. On Tuesday morning his staff approached a private employment agency, specialising in finding acting work, and a state-run job centre. offering an afternoon's money. "It was a first for us but because I have a lot of people on file I did not hesitate a second," said Dominique Soret, director of the casting agency, who was promised more than £500 but has yet to receive anything. The state-run job centre was asked to provide about 100 unemployed people. "300 francs (£30) for three hours, it is not bad," said one, a mathematics student who attended with a dozen friends.

On Tuesday afternoon the public miraculously regained its fascination with the fate of the left. The hall was packed with more than 200 spectators, applauding enthusiastically as Laurent Fabius. president of the National Assembly, and several min-isters held forth for the television cameras.

But the secret came out when one of the camera crew was mistakenly handed one of the sealed envelopes that members of the audience were handed as they filed out. He opened it to discover that it contained about £35 in cash. The government pondered all day Wednesday how to save face, but unable to. M Stirn was asked by Michel Rocard, the prime minister, to resign. Yesterday few regret-ted his going. M Stirn is a little-liked political maverick who has changed parties five times in 10 years and has gone from right-winger to left-winger in the process. He blamed the rent-a-crowd fiasco on an "unlucky initiative" by two over-zealous staff members.

Americans find a biological alibi for their sins and vices

From Charles Bremner IN NEW YORK

IN THE old days you could blame the Devil or perhaps the demon drink for your sins and vices. In the more enlightened postwar era a claim to a deprived childhood would serve to dilute your guilt or, if poverty was lacking, you could argue you were a victim of society. America has now sanctified a 1990s version of the old moral alibi: it holds that criminal and excessive behaviour is the product of disease. From the law courts to talk shows, from New York bars to Texas school rooms, you hear the jargon of the new science, a language whose key words are addiction and compulsion.

When the Federal Bureau of Investigation trapped Mayor Marion Barry of Washington in the act of snorting crack, he knew his voters would understand when he gave his explanation. "That was mantle of the recovering addict, the condition which has assumed the level of fad now that no fewer than 15 million Americans attend "support groups" for "compulsive behaviour" and its consequences. Many more believe that they are victims. As Kitty Dukakis, the wife of the Massachusetts governor, and countless other public figures have shown, public confession leads to fame and often fortune.

Take another revealing case, that of Richard Berendzen, the president of American University and a prominent figure in the public life of "Boswash", the Boston-Washington corridor that used to be known as the East Coast. He resigned last month after the police charged him with making anonymous obscene telephone calls to women. Rather than retreat in disgrace, he went on national the disease talking ... I was a television to explain that his victim." Mr Barry donned the unusual habit stemmed from an obsessive-compulsive disorder.

Psychiatrists then came forward to explain Mr Berendzen's behaviour, accuse his victims of lack of sympathy and suggest that he suffered from abnormal genes, as alcoholics are now held to do. "Some aberrant behaviour is caused more by abnormal DNA sequences within an individual's chromosomes than by the moral lapses commonly described as wickedness, hostility or turpitude," said Dr Kenneth Grundfast.

Many of the new medical explanations for immoral or excessive behaviour extend from the theories of dependence used 10 explain alcoholism. You do not need to read the medical journals to hear of the hundreds of new disorders now afflicting Americans, most of them more benign than criminal. Magazines and talk list comes sex addiction. Allied to that are such syndromes as women who love too much". Putting up with a disordered spouse or loved one creates its own syndrome - co-dependency. First diagnosed for alcoholic families, it has now been extended to those who get too involved with partners who suffer from addictions such as shopaholism, workaholism, caffeinism, petism and compulsive wife-beating. Law courts have heard from experts about the miseries of compulsive bank-robbing syndrome. While sceptics scoff, more and more people are flocking to seek succour at self-help sessions. Each week over half a million groups gather. Co-sufferers "share" the torments of life under the influence of everything from gambling to being born rich (Rich Kids Anonymous). For almost any problem you can shows are full of them. Top of the name, you will find an organisation, often with a colourful name.

For women who keep falling in love with priests, there is, for example, Good Tidings. These ladies might also belong to Older Women in Relationships with Younger Men. Conceivably, the same might benefit from membership of the International Intractable Hiccups Organisation.

However, some experts have now begun suggesting that America has come under the influence of what might be called a compulsive exculpation syndrome. "Creating a world of addictive diseases may mean creating a world in which anything is excusable," said Stanton Peele, whose book is called The Diseasing of America. Even Howard Shaffer, the director of the Centre for Addiction Studies at Harvard Medical School, thinks things have gone too far. "Frankly, the professions are too quick to turn a dollar on this," he said. The critics complain that the new vogue strays far from the original notion that addiction implied chemical dependence on a drug. The term, they say, has become a catch-all diagnosis used to absolve people of responsibility for their actions. If you regard lying and cheating as symptoms of illness, then character is reduced to chemistry, they say. "If vice is merely disease, then virtue is robbed of its power to be anything more than fitness and health," said Suzanne Fields, one of a chorus of conservative columnists who have condemned the tendency to absolve addicts of any In one startling case recently, for

Britain and France resist Bush nuclear war doctrine

"new Nato" soon became apparent yesterday on the opening day of the alliance

While everyone was happy that the foreign ministers should work on the text of the final communique on the basis of an American draft, both Margaret Thatcher and President Mitterrand of France confessed they were wary of a new nuclear doctrine proposed by President Bush.

The American president said Nato should declare that nuclear systems were "weapons of last resort". It was one of four tasks he outlined for President Mitterrand accepted that France was not a part of the alliance's integrated military structure but gave a warning against making any change to existing Nato nuclear doctrine.

Pressure for Soviet pull-out

From ANNE McELVOY IN EAST BERLIN

RAINER Eppelmann, the East Germany defence minister, gave a warning yesterday that tensions were rising in the country between Soviet troops and an increasingly resentful population, and said the gov-ernment would demand their withdrawal within six years.

In his strongest statement yet on the Soviet presence, Herr Eppelmann said that the stationing of 360,000 Soviet troops was now "rubble on the battlefield of history". His words put added pressure on Moscow to begin withdrawal immediately. Eduard Shevardnadze, his Soviet counterpart, said in East Berlin last month that he was prepared to start the removal of the Western Group of Soviet forces in six months on condition that the Western allies iso removed their forces at the same rate.

The Soviet army, however, is now under greater internal sure to go than the British, French and American troops.

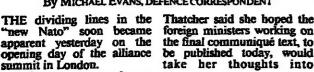

Herr Eppelmann called on the people of East Germany to show greater tolerance to-wards the Soviet forces in the meantime. "We must find political solutions for the coexistence of German and Soviet people on GDR territory in a united Germany."

Anti-Gorbachev protests and attacks on soldiers are gathering in strength. Soviet officers had to disarm troops to prevent retaliation recently when local residents, angered by low-flying exercises. stormed an air base and attacked guards. "It came to violence from our side. East Germans threw stones and bottles at Soviet soldiers," said Herr Eppelmann.

Further protests have been reported from the northern base of Demmin where the Soviet army had to pay damages after a test explosion caused the deaths of farm animals. The Soviet memorial in Treptow is under increased guard after being extensively vandalised at the beginning of the year.

The statement comes as tension between the Soviet forces and the East Germans are higher than ever. Last week, a Soviet soldier who kidnapped an East German couple was shot dead by police and in the garrison town of Poisdam a group of off-duty soldiers were attacked by local skinheads last weekend.

 BONN: Susanne Albrecht, arrested in East Germany at the beginning of last month in connection with terrorist of-fences committed by the Red Army Faction, was transferred to a West German jail yesterday at her own request (lan Murray writes). his colleagues in Houston to bend a little towards China, he will be fêted in Tokyo. Businessmen are eager to get back to business with Peking, ful that America and some and some Japanese cabinet ministers have been openly pressing for a unilateral resumption of lending to China. In fact, if Mr Kaifu fails to persuade his Houston allies, a unilateral decision is very much on the cards.
Japan has also decided that once-a-year summits do not provide an adequate forum for its views, especially if its Western allies expect it to sign many of the cheques. With East-West relations shifting from confrontation to dialogue, Tokyo believes it has not been doing enough talking to its own allies. Japan is so worried about not being invited as a matter of routine to all the top tables, especially in Europe, that it has begun inviting itself. It is expressing views on defence to Nato, and considering regular talks with the 35-member Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe (CSCE). Washington dominates Japan's foreign policy, but it is taking the European Community more seriously as a political force. Taizo Watanabe, a senior official in Japan's foreign min-

China's policy of reform and istry, says Tokyo is considering regular consultations with the CSCE as part of its drive to raise its political profile abroad, "Japan plans to play a positive role in formulating a new order in Europe. We might consider setting up an arena for systematic dialogue with the CSCE," he said. Becoming more opinionated in areas that it recently regarded as outside its sphere of concern, Japan has started putting its views to Nato. In Brussels on Wednesday Taro Nakayama, the foreign min-ister, told Manfred Worner, Nato's secretary-general, that Japan backed the alliance's call for a united Germany to be a member. Defence has not been a subject that makes Japanese ministers talkative, but Tokyo is aware that Nato and Europe. are building a new security structure in a changing Europe and it wants to make sure that the end result does not leave Tokyo with a problem in Asia. It wants to ensure that Soviet troops withdrawn from Europe are not redeployed in Asia. "I would like to take various opportunities in the future to have more dialogue and consultations with Nato," Mr Nakayama said after the meeting.

Gorbachev takes control of party congress

From MARY DEJEVSKY IN MOSCOW

THIS time next week the Soviet Communist party could have a predominantly new Central Committee, an almost new Politburo or other policy-making body - and President Gorbachev could have been re-elected general secretary and hailed as the man who oversaw the wholesale renewal of the party. Through the first days of the 28th party congress such a scenario looked unlikely. The reformists' warnings about the strength of conservative opinion were borne out, as speaker after speaker berated the leadership for economic and political chaos which they attributed wholly to perestroika. At times, even the usually cool Soviet president looked strained.

By yesterday, however, there were signs Mr Gorbachev had taken a grip on proceedings, just as he did at the Congress of People's Deputies which elected him president in March, and in a similar way. He is systematically identifying the few nearly 5,000 delegates of diverse political views and cultural backgrounds, and aims to exploit these common concerns to discredit his opponents in the leadership.

Wednesday was the watershed. More than 30 people spoke, ostensibly to address reports presented on the first two days by President Gorbachev and individual members of the leadership.

The choice of speakers seemed eclectic. Why, for instance, should the delegation of the pro-Moscow Lithuanian Communist party, num-bering only a few dozen people and with little influence in its republic, supply two speakers when the vast Moscow party supplied only one and some republics none? Why were so many district party officials called to speak, who then vied with each other to condemn the state of the country and the leadership? But the apparently random choice of speakers was deceptive. Every one, including the most condemnatory, had a contribution to make remain party leader.

The role of the republic party leaders was the most obvious. All praised Mr Gorbachev's plan for a new Union treaty to define the country as a "union of sovereign socialist states". This is the Soviet leader's trump card. If even the ethnically and economically domi-nant Russian Federation believes it would benefit from a looser federal structure, only the most orthodox communist official would try to argue centralism was preferable.

The point that the Soviet Union could be held together only by a looser union of republics was driven home by the first secretary of Azerbaijan and the two Lithuanian party officials. They conveyed, with passion born of their own experience, the fate awaiting parties which do not move with the times.

In the case of Lithuania, delegates were presented with the case of what happens when a Communist party splits and the orthodox branch becomes a minority opposition party. The experience of Azerbaijan conveyed a related but different message, showing the state to which a republic party could be reduced, not only if it did not respond to local concerns, but also if the central leadership was not strong enough to support it. "If perestroika is not to lose," the Azerbaijan first secretary said, "the steering wheel must be in firm hands." He was careful, how-ever, to lay the blame for lack of firmness not on President Gorbachev, but on "divisions within the

Throughout the day, successive speakers had criticised the planned switch to a market economy, but their remarks were directed less towards the concept of the market as they saw it, than towards the way the reform had been prepared.

The majority made clear they did not hold Mr Gorbachev responsible for the current problems, and would support his re-election as general secretary as the only person able to lead the party and the country out of its present crisis. They also made support of a new and younger team, more representative of the spread of opinion in the party at large.

By late afternoon, the backstage feeling seemed to be that the frequent mentions of Mr Gorbachev as the only choice for general secretary might become counterproductive. A couple of delegates requested his name be used less often as over-use smacked of a "personality cult".

The choice and order of speakers is decided by the congress secretariat which is chaired by Aleksandr Ilyin. political editor of the party paper Pravda and a supporter of Mr Gorbachev. The secretariat was the only body to get an additional member during the first day's voting and it is unlikely to be coincidence that he was from the party's reformist Democratic Plat-form group. Warsaw accord in danger

From A CORRESPONDENT IN WARSAW

CZESLAW Janicki, the Polish agriculture minister and a member of the Peasant party, yesterday became the first casualty in a shake-up due to be announced today by the embattled prime minister, Tadeusz Mazowiecki.

Mr Janicki resigned after questioning by angry deputies, mostly from his own party, on the use of police force to oust more than 100 farmers from the agriculture ministry on the third day of an occupation to draw attention to their de-mands for higher prices for their products. The resignation came as Mr Mazowiecki faces the worst crisis of his 10-month-old government, the first noncommunist leadership in Eastannounce changes in the 23member cabinet in a policy speech to the Sejm today. There is speculation that anything from two to nine ministers will be replaced. If he were to go for a wholesale upheaval, the changes would signal the death knell for the historic "round-table agreement" with the communists, the Peasant party and the Democratic party that sealed the make-up of the government after Solidarity's overwhelming win in the parliamentary elections last year. The prime minister had a two-hour meeting on Tuesday with President Jaruzelski to discuss the growing crisis, which has been partly brought on by the continued criticism from Lech Walesa, the Solidarity leader, that too many communists remain in the government. Among his targets is Czeslaw Kiszczak, whose interior ministry is under investigation for possible misappropriation of

The statement urged Tirana to ensure the safety of the refugees, to refrain from reprisals against their families, and to guarantee their safe passage.

Noting that Albania wanted to draw closer to the 35-nation Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, the European Community also called on the government to adopt democratic reforms so that human rights would be fully respected.

The statement was delivered to the Albanian authori-ties by the ambassadors of West Germany, France, Italy

A charter plane carrying supplies for the refugees in the West German embassy was refused permission to land at Tirana on Wednesday night. Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the West German foreign minister, said in a radio interview that a second attempt would be made to fly in food and medical supplies for the 91 refugees, including a pregnant woman and young children, inside the West German embassy. The Italian foreign ministry announced that it also had a relief aircraft which was standing by.

Talks aimed at securing safe passage out of Albania for the refugees have been complicated by the government's refusal to recognise them as dissidents, labelling them instead as "hooligans and crim-

But Herr Genscher promised that none would be turned away from the West German diplomatic com-pound against their will. "We will take measures to facilitate a longer stay in our embassy should the process last longer than we wish," he said. Herr Genscher could not confirm a report by the Austrian news agency, APA, that two people were shot dead while climbing the West German embassy wall.

It remained unclear whether the events in Tirana represented the emergence of a coherent opposition to the gime of President Ramiz Alia.

The rush on foreign embassies was sparked by demonstrations at the weekend for greater political freedom. It is not known whether subsequent gatherings have taken place, although a Hungarian newspaper claimed that thousands massed in Tirana's main square on Wednesday.

Access to foreign embassies is now reportedly cordoned off by the Albanian security forces, who have maintained a heavy presence on the streets.

Albania's self-styled king, Leka I, living in exile in South Africa, yesterday described himself as "the leader of the opposition, whether that includes republicans or monarchists". He called for a military coup to overthrow President Alia.

in the event of a coup, he hoped to return to Albania to oversee a plebiscite giving Albanians the choice between a monarchy and a republic.

The would-be king Leka was taken from the country when he was only three days old in order to escape Fascist Italy's invasion in 1939 but he proclaimed himself king on the death of his father, Zog, in

Popular Havel given second term

From Peter Green IN PRAGUE

VACLAV Havel was re-elected president of Czechoslovakia by the country's parliament yesterday, six months after he took office in the wake of last November's "velvet revolution".

Mr Havel will serve for two years, during which time he will lead the country further toward economic and constitutional reforms aimed at creating a democratic state and introducing a functioning market economy.

He was elected as Czechoslovakia's first non-communist president since 1948 last December, six weeks after he led Civic Forum in overthrowing the country's communist rulers.

The 300-seat federal assembly quickly reached a vote of 234 to 50, far more than the three-fifths majority needed in each house, to elect Mr Havel, who was the only candidate.

The greatest opposition came from the Slovak half of the Czechoslovak parliament's House of Nations, where 16 of the 73 Slovak deputies voted against Mr Havel. The 16 deputies named as government ministers have yet to be replaced in parliament.

Mr Havel was nominated by the parliament's chairman, Alexander Dubcek, before parliament in Vladislav Hall, which is the traditional site for the coronation of Czech kings and the election of Czechoslovak presidents.

"At the head of our society there must be people of high moral credit ...

republic. Therefore I propose Mr Vaclav Havel," Mr Dubcek told parliament.

After the election, Mr Havel entered the hall to the overture from Smetana's opera Libuse. Dressed in a dark suit and maroon tie, he looked around shyly as he stood, left hand on the Czechoslovak constitution, to take the oath of office. After signing the oath, leaving off the small heart that usually adorns his autograph, Mr Havel and the crowd rose for the Czechoslovak national anthem.

Throughout his presidency, Mr Havel has taken pains to rebuild the dignity of the office, demeaned under 40 years of communist rule, and has been given high marks for strengthening the presidential role in his first term.

Clearly, however, they can be extended indefinitely, not least since the Albanian separatists are unlikely to give up their struggle. It was yesterday not immediately clear if Serbia's move to take over the province had the approval of the Yugoslav federal authorities, Reports that the collective Yugoslav state presidency was to meet that the federal government would also be represented seemed to suggest, however, that the decision might have been taken without prior consultation. The state of emersency and the police presence would seem to confirm this.

Serbia's decision raises many questions, especially whether Albanian opposition groups will be able to continue

Philip Howard

This is the time of year for leaving-parties, commem balls, founder's-day celebrations and the adjudication of The Times book-reviewing contest for sixth-formers. The most important part of anybody's job is finding her or his successor. This is a function that journalists (whose supposed passion for everything new is proclaimed in their organ, the newspaper) tend to be better at than politicians (who find it difficult to conceive how the world can carry on after they stop running it). Mrs Thatcher is notoriously blinkered about the possibility of her eventual successor. But can you think of any prime minister since the war who handed on to a younger replacement with a song in his heart? Several carried on for years when they were clearly clapped out.

In language, more than other fields of human activity, the young are bound to rule. Along with life, language is the only common property of all of us. You do not have to join a profession or ass an exam to use it. Writing is less bound by precedent than politics, the law or farming. The young are going to introduce their own vocabulary and grammar, if only to proclaim their difference from the previous generation. They are already doing so. To read essays by 17-year-olds every night of the year, I should need to be paid (highly). Once a year it is a delight and an eye-opener to see

The little monkeys have picked up bad habits from us. I compiled a long list of Lit Crit jargon: wry and perceptive, compulsive, taut and stark, valid, ironic, certainly a vital read, and a closet full of "hidden agenda(s)". An occupa-tional hazard of journalism, because we write so fast with so little revision, is to get stuck in a groove, until some good friend tells us that we have said that before, several times. An alarm goes off these days every time I think of writing "nasty, brutish, and short"; current tinsel bits of vocabulary that fall into my writing are "seriously" as an intensifier, and "boo-word", which is arch philosophical jargon. My sixth-formers were at it, qualifying like the worst of us, with their "somewhat"s and "to a certain extent"s. We should go through our prose with a boe, cutting out weeds and words that are not pulling their weight.

I am pleased to report that there has been a notable decline in the vogue for the exclamation mark in the work of our brighter sixthformers. Last year their book reviews were punctuated with gaspers as thickly as a field of hill barley is with wild oats. If you have to signal a joke with an exclamation mark, it cannot be much of a joke. This year I spotted only three gaspers in 32 essays dressed up as book reviews screechers. This year's were fatties. They never used one adjec-tive if they could think of two, or preferably three, that meant roughly the same thing. So we had a strong and vivid picture, acutely sensitive and moving, poignant and disturbing, a dashingly beautiful and charming heiress. As an inveterate sinner with redundant adjectives, I recognized the vice. After my first piece for The Times, hero, said: "Don't put all your plums in the pudding." So I went through these apprentice book reviews with Occam's spike. "Startlingly incongruous": if it was incongruous, it would be startling, wouldn't it? "Every woman's personal nightmare". but a nightmare is personal by definition, dear girl; how can you dream somebody else's night-mare? "Touchingly physical": as opposed to touchingly metaphysi-cal? If it touches, it is by definition physical. "Evil murders": are we making a distinction with mercy killing here? Oh, I had a good time playing the pedagogue and rebuk-ing the young for my dearest faults. I put them all on a linguistic diet restricting them to one adjective or adverb per essay until the end of the year, and let the adjective be predicative rather than attributive, please: "Journalism is a lean, spare, taut and starkly unadjectival register," I

They took it all with grace, though I detected the thoughtful look of those who know that time is on their side in the eyes of some of them. That night, feeling pretty pleased with myself, I turned to Shakespeare to clean my palate. Macbeth, sound on children, I tend to think. At once a host of redundant adjectives leapt off the page at me, like a man's personal nightmare, poignant and disturb-ing Lady Macbeth: "Come to my woman's breasts." What other kind of breasts would I suppose you to have, lady? "Sightless substances": I know that the spirits, murd'ring ministers, are sightless, whether you mean it in the sense of (a) blind, (b) invisible, or (c) unsightly. "The dunnest smoke of Hell": you would expect the smoke from that place to be dunnish, dingy brown or grey, or murky, without being told. "That my keen knife see not the wound it makes": not much point getting out a blunt knife for the job in hand, dear girl. I suppose we can justify that otiose epithet as another Shakespearean pun. Keen means (a) sharp and (b) cager. The knife's eagerness might be blumted if it saw the horror. Children, always bring a cold eye to the advice of experts!

(Gasper.) Among other things, Shakespeare was a sixth-former who never grew up, inebriated with the joy of adjectives. I did enjoy Iris Murdoch's Sacred and Profound Love, and the summary Last year's crop of prospective of Lord of the Flies as "a party of reviewers were gaspers and boys inhibit a lagoon-like island". Robert Maclennan explains why the modern world is pushing Britain towards a written code of rights

place in the pantheon of 20th-Liberal secretary of state for war who, according to Field Marshal Haig, made victory possible in 1918. Yet Haldane's fine political legacy was a white paper on the machinery of government, now largely forgotten, which he wrote while out of government, under a political cloud. This helped to shape the organisation of the cabinet office and cabinet committees along lines which remained little changed until Mrs Thatcher entered Downing Street.

Politicians live, of course, by their reputation for getting things done: respectful hats off to William Beveridge, but golden laurels to Nye Bevan for the health service. But the Haldane tale has a comforting moral for politicians who share the perception of Enoch Powell that political careers mostly end in disappointment. As in life, the progenitor and the accoucheur of political reform are unlikely to be the same person.

These reflections welled up in place of an apology for the presumption of a Liberal Democrat, far from government office, in publishing proposals yesterday not merely to reform the constitutional arrangements under which our country is governed but for suggesting that they should be codified in a written constitution. The proposals themselves will be judged elsewhere. It is the reasoning behind their publication that requires explanation.

When politicians cannot get things done, and time and chance rarely seem to favour them, what are they to do? A common practice is to concentrate on survival and to live in hope. The more rewarding pastime is to ask questions, real questions to which you want to know the answer, about the society in which you live. If you listen hard, and not always to the same people within three miles of may be rewarded by hearing some unexpected leitmotivs.

They are seldom sounded by those who would bend your ear lest their hobbyhorse be forgotten, but start as a susurrus of thought, like a breeze at dawn, cool, uncertain in direction. They seem of all parties, and those who to recur, to gather force, move together. The political weather system is changing. So it was when awareness of the environment began to enter the consciousness of politicians.

What are these new sustlines about constitutional governmen and from where do they come? They appear as little discontents and larger disappointments. Why is parliament no better than it is? We have seen it for ourselves. All parties promise high employment and low inflation. Other countries get them. How could this government abolish the Greater London Council when Londoners clearly wanted it? We in Scotland voted against the poll tax, but we got it first. It is funny the way the prime minister can choose her moment for an election. Not quite fair. They seem to talk sense in the House of Lords, but no one seems to listen. I know I have my rights, but I would have to go to Strasbourg to be sure of them. Politicians? They're all the same.

It's the system.

Quite so. And active politicians.

comment upon their doings, know it too. They know how public debate is managed by the withholding of crucial information. They know that parliament cannot properly scrutinise the volume of legislation which pours from Whitehall. They know that whatever MPs may say in debate it is the government that decides. Two weeks ago a Commons committee was asked by a Home Office minister to support the view that the European Com-mission had no business to propose that Community nationals should enjoy the right to vote in local elections in whichever EC country they are resident. MPs of all parties on the committee spoke against the minister's case but 10 days later, having lost the argument, the government tabled a motion, which was not debatable, that the House should approve its position. Why go to the trouble? The issue was never in doubt.

It is from Europe, however, that the winds of constitutional change are blowing strongest. Why should power when even the French have strengthened provincial government? Must we alone deny ourseives a fundamental law enforceable in the courts to protect our fundamental freedoms? If our judges can safely be allowed to apply the written European constitutional framework, why not a domestic constitution too?

Shall we wait to have the limitless power of central government limited by Community law alone, or shall we recognise these currents of discontent at home and seek to redefine for ourselves how we would distribute public power. both to enhance its effectiveness and to increase its accountability? Would not the very process help to renew our national identity and give greater meaning to the con-cept of citizenship? The questioners are in all political parties and in none. Those of us who have the advantage of some distance from power may be forgiven for trying to offer some answers. Poor manipulated Mandela, prisoner of others' words

Mandela's, in Dublin this week, about the IRA. The because he was "tired". They were part of a deliberate, concerted, collective political strategy, of which Mr Mandela is now the spokesman, though not the archi-tect. The recommendation that the government hold talks with the IRA belongs with his praise, in America, for Arafat, Castro and Gadaffi. It belongs with the reiterated opposition to any relaxation of sanctions. Above all, it belongs with the insistence that the war" of the African National Congress must continue until apartheid is well and truly over. The Provisional IRA - through its legal front, Sinn Fein - is actually now part of the Irish Anti-Apartheid Movement, Mr Mandela's host in Dublin. The executive of the Irish Anti-Apartheid Movement decided, a few years ago, to affiliate Provisional Sinn Fein. The decision was taken on the recommendation of the present chairman of the move-ment, Kadar Asmal, an astute, hard-left lawyer.

That decision precipitated the resignation from the movement of a number of prominent people, including the former taoiseach, Garret FitzGerald. From being a in the Sixties - when I was chairman - and up to the late Seventies, the Irish Anti-Apartheid Movement became a tightly controlled organisation of the hard left, on the cosiest of terms with both Sinn Fein-IRA in Ireland and the hardliners in the ANC leadership in Lusaka and now also in South Africa. That was the combination that produced Mr Mandela's recommendation for talks with the IRA.

That recommendation, and no more than that, is precisely what the IRA wanted from Nelson Mandela, and with the help of its friends in the Irish Anti-Apartheid Movement, and in the ANC leadership, the IRA got what it wanted. It gave it, of course, a propaganda bonanza, both internationally and in Ireland. Gerry Adams, president of Sinn Fein, duly thanked Mr Mandela for having said what Gerry Adams's friends had told him to say.

As it happens, I have some practical experience of the ANC-

Conor Cruise O'Brien on ANC hardliners' policy towards the West that means their spokesman must pay obeisance to unlikely groups, including the IRA

IRA link-up. At the time of the affiliation of Provisional Sinn Fein to the Irish Anti-Apartheid Movement, I publicly protested, as a sponsor and former chairman of the movement. Later, in an article in The Times in 1986, I denounced the ANC's so-called "academic boycott" as victimizing both individual scholars and individual scholars and individual scholars and individual scholars. stitutions -- like the universities of Cape Town and Witwatersrand which have actually broken South African law by completely desegregating their campuses.

Mr Asmal, as chairman of the Irish Anti-Apartheid Movement, publicly attacked me for opposing the "academic boycott" in principle and for violating it in practice, by accepting an invitation from the University of Cape Town's department of political science for a five-week teaching spell. Towards the end of that spell, my class was violently broken up by a mob of students and non-students. Among the placards carried by members of that mob was one that read, on one side, "Viva ANC", and on the other, "Viva IRA".

There have, in the past, been military links between the IRA and the ANC. Two former IRA leaders recalled, in Dublin this week, the days in the late Seventies when the IRA provided military training for ANC units. I do not believe there are now any serious military links between the IRA and the ANC. For one thing, the

ANC's "war" is more theatrical than real. But the political links between the ANC and Sinn Fein are significant, and they bore fruit

The significance of these links is the same as that of the tributes to Arafat, Castro and Gadaffi and the same as that of "the academic boycott". The point is to distance the ANC - and thereby the future of South Africa — from Western liberal values, such as the rule of law and freedom of expression. And for the ANC hardiners who are now calling the tune, it is important that it should be Nelson Mandela who should be heard to sing that tune (even though his rendition is in a much lower key than the hardliners would like).

The hardliners, whose vision of a future South Africa is a totalitarian one, distrust Mr Mandela, and for good reason. Even in his famous speech from the dock at Rivonia in April 1963, Mr Mandela said some frightful things from the point of view of the people who now control him. The worst, in that sense, was the following offered in the context of an explanation of his relationship with his communist comrades within the ANC.

Mr Brown has

out the great Rivonia speech, spoke in the first person singular. But these days it is almost always "we", speaking on behalf of the collective leadership of the ANC. In the early days, after his release from prison, Mr Mandela did attempt to offer leadership, in a personal way. He told the young people of Soweto to throw away their weapons, and he announced that it was his intention to meet Chief Buthelezi, the Zulu leader. But then he cancelled, uni-Buthelezi. That seems to have been the turning point. From then ou, although his tone remains conciliatory, Mr Mandela has toed the party line on all matters of substance and on important symbolic issues, such as policy towards

Why does Mr Mandela not assert his leadership, based on his enormous prestige and popularity? Part of the answer is that he is afraid of splitting the African National Congress, while the hardliners do not care whether there is a split or not. Within any such movement, people who are afraid of a split are at the mercy of people who are not afraid of a split. So Mr Mandels became a prisoner of his friends, and a more tragic figure than ever he was when a prisoner of his enemies.

In Dublin this week I felt sick at heart, watching Nelson Mandela being manipulated by Sinn Fein-IRA, from within the Irish Anti-Apartheid Movement.

The most important thing to do before taking the car for its annual service is to clear out its glove compartment. That is because the garage I take it to is assiduous in its commitment to returning its little charges (in return, of course, for its enormous charges) in pristine condition. This requires their operatives to empty glove compartments, door pockets, seat-nets and so forth, in order that these be spotiessly vanitised. The owner is thus advised to empty these beforehand, if he does not want to get his detritus not only handed back to him in a plastic bag, but, far worse, counted out in front of him on the reception desk, as if he had just been released from Wormwood Scrubs.

ould the dissidents of Albania, growing ever bolder in defying their determinedly Stalinist regime, have drawn strength from the civilising qualities of cricket? The Chelsea-based civils of the Phase Wonder. cricket club, the Phene Wanderers, and its tour operator, Martyn Holidays, have just returned from a coaching mission to Albania, and in addition to having imparted the advantages of a straight but the club hopes that it may have helped to resolve the 44-year-old dispute over the Corfu Channel incident which led to the break-down of diplomatic relations between Britain and Albania.

During the Greek civil war in 1946 two British destroyers were mined in the strait between Albania and Corfu with the loss of 40 lives. An international court awarded Britain compensation, but the Albanians refused to admit liability. Britain thereafter blocked the return of Albanian gold recovered from the Nazis, worth £38 million at today's prices and still in the Bank of England's vaults. While coaching at Saranda, Noel Baptiste of the Phene club met an elderly Albanian official who offered an explanation for Albania's reluctance to admit responsibility for the incident. "The official, who insisted on total anonymity, admitted that Albanian forces co-operated closely with the Yugoslav forces of Tito and the communists and that the Yugoslavs had laid the mines with the co-operation or connivance of may have played a small part in leading to the solution of the dispute and the restoration of diplomatic relations. If the Albanians had been introduced to the game years ago they might never have been ruptured."

The Foreign Office, while point-ing out that Britain has never claimed that the Albanians actually did the deed themselves, accepts this is a new development. "This would appear to be the first time anyone in Albania has admitted knowledge of the mines," it says. "Britain has always been keen to talk. The ball is in their court." Or should that be on their wicket?

Already there is talk of rehanging the pictures, and one area, housing 14th- and 15th-century religious paintings, is being forced to close at noon

visitors is raising the temperature to a point where the fabric of the pictures could be damaged. "We've been so successful that far more visitors than ever seemed possible are turning up," says Dr Dennis Farr, director of the Institute. He estimates that there are now 2,000 visitors a day. "We are restricting the numbers as far as we are able to give a more even spread, so that visitors can enjoy the pictures." In practice this simply means shutting the door on simply means shuring the door on some 1,000 visitors a day. "We've had some grumbles," Farr admits, "but a first-come, first-served basis seems the only reasible way

Farr confesses that the heat is a problem which should have been problem which should have been anticipated, but says: "It's a quirk of the structure of the building which we were only able to find out when we started to use it." Dehumidifying machines and the relocation of screens are being considered. On the opening of the gallery its chairman, Sir Nicholas Goodison, described Somerset House as "the phoenix rising from the ashes". Unless its temperature can be reduced, it might find itself

Vicars peering heavenward for inspiration as they pen their Sunday sermons may soon have access to instant electronic assistance from the temporal world. A book that looks like the Bible but opens up into a computerised version of it has been invented and will provide the right biblical phrase at the press of a button. One legal obstacle faces the inventor, Kayode Agunbiade, who is based in Brixton in London. He fed the computer the King James text, which is subject to "rights which are vested in the Crown", a form of ancient copyright currently administered by Cambridge Univ-ersity Press. It has yet to hear from Agmbiade. "It's a matter of law and protocol," says a spokesman. "Frankly, though, I wouldn't spend a couple of hundred pounds on one - I'd rather read the book." But then he doesn't have a sermon to write.

 Why was the Phyllis Court country club, strategically placed opposite the stewards' enclosure at opposite the stemates enclosure at Henley, flying the Union Jack upside down at the regatta this week? To display the flag thus is traditionally a sign of distress. Explanations ranged from England's exit from the World Cup to bar profits being washed down the Henley drain in the downpour.

s the Tories sweep into A Landudno today for their annual Welsh conference, there is more than a touch of desperation about the biographical details given by some of their candidates. The party holds just seven of the 38 Welsh seats, and many candidates have done their imaginative best to get over the difficult fact that they do not actually live there. Westminster city councillor Richard Evans, who faces the hopeless task of trying to unseat Labour in Neath, seeks the Welsh vote on the strength of the fact that his cousin is secretary of the Welsh Rugby Union. Walter Sweeney, in the Vale of Glamorgan, clearly hopes to impress in the land of the oval ball with the fact that he went to Rugby. In Newmort Fast, Angela Rugby. In Newport East, Angela Emmeti boasts of having offered Emmett boasts of having offered "munual aid at many by elections, including Welsh and northern seats", although she is strangely silent about another Welsh connection — her Ealing home, close to the Kinnocks. The Kinnock connection, indeed, can cut both ways. Invasther Frans Kinnock connection, indeed, can cut both ways. Jonathan Evans, candidate in Brecon and Radnor, has the unusual distinction of being "a Welshman by birth and upbringing". But surely his local education at Lewis school, Pengam, makes him a product of the same classroom as Neil the same classroom as Neil Kinnock? Yes, but the biography helpfully explains: "He learnt far more there than Mr Kinnock did." ● It is widely held that England's last World Cup success helped Harold Wilson enhance his popularity in 1966. Mrs Thatcher, then, could be forgiven her triumphant announcement that England had equalized against West Germany during her speech to Tory agents at the annual Rhys Tory agents at the annual Blue Ball at London's Intercontinental holel on Wednesday night. Be-cause of the match her after-dinner speech was made pre-dinner which means that she was not still on her feet when triumph furned to disaster in the penalty shoot-out.

FIRST STEP TO DEVOLUTION

The signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement in 1985 was always likely to blight hopes of devolved self-government in the province. For five years, the resistance among local politicians to considering a devolution they once took for granted has rendered the option invisible and inaudible.

The Northern Ireland secretary's speech in the Commons yesterday, which did no more than declare the talking season open, marks the start of the first real debate on the issue since the Agreement began. With luck, Irish political horse-trading can now supplant vacuous speculation about the balance of power between devolutionists and integrationists in the Official Unionist Party, the impact of infant Conservative associations or the shift of Catholic votes between Sinn Fein and the British government policy in Northern Ireland for the last 20 years has sought to "Ulsterise" much of the machinery of direct rule. This has not meant a return to the Unionist past: Whitehall has remained the referee and the paymaster. But over the years, more and more decisions have been undertaken locally. Security policy has been placed in the hands of the RUC, with a smaller army but retaining the ultimate veto. Social and regional policy, after trial and error, has been increasingly adapted to local conditions. The aim of devolving powers should be to produce a local administration not just more suited to local conditions but more rooted in political consensus in the province. But no such administration can survive if one party or one community holds power without any prospect of ever being turned out by the voters. That is the largest and oldest of the dilemmas which has to be solved. Many ingenious geometric patterns have been drawn; none have worked. Mr Brooke has not yet reached the core of the problem. He has cleared away one obstacle only: the Unionist refusal to sit at any table while the inter-governmental talks held under the Agreement continued. Since London, Dublin and Belfast speak to each other incessantly in real life, this was a synthetic and symbolic problem. Mr Brooke has patiently

conjured a suitably artificial and ambiguous

The long record of well-meaning attempt and failure on devolution shows that schemes can be stopped at any stage. The real test which any devolved administration must pass is not only to exist, but to become a legitimate institution in the eyes of a solid majority of Ulster's people. The fulfilment of that distant dream would truly deserve the overworked description of a "breakthrough". Yesterday, Mr Brooke registered merely that he has been able to move further than some of his predecessors. His real target must be to improve on the short-lived Sunningdale power-sharing administration of 1974. A glance at the Sunningdale bottom line makes clear the distance which Messrs Paisley, Molyneaux, Hume and Brooke still have to travel. There is no obvious reason why Mr Hume and the SDLP should settle for less than they did at Sunningdale: a guarantee of four out of eleven seats on the executive. Mr Paisley continues to say that he is against powersharing. Mr Molyneaux has hinted that he will use the occasion of the talks to push a case for a regional council less powerful than the Sunningdale executive and, he implies, with no reserved places for the minority. There is one obstruction to Mr Brooke's progress which could easily disappear: the cavilling of the Fianna Fail government in Dublin. The Irish government signed the Anglo-Irish Agreement, a document containing an express wish to create a devolved government in Northern Ireland. The Agreement nowhere stipulates when the British government is required to consult Dublin about any possible devolution plan. Given the shock which the Agreement transmitted to the Unionist community in the north, the business of bringing Unionist parties to the table was always going to be tricky. If Mr Haughey is as serious as he claims to be about the welfare of both communities on his northern border, he will give his blessing to the exploratory talks. The path ahead of Mr Brooke is already littered with obstacles. He has no need of an extra one.

JAPAN SEARCHES FOR PARTNERS

There is a ghost at the Nato feast this week, tapping gently for admittance: Japan. Viewed from the Far East, recent shifts in Europe's politics and security have more than regional implications. They amount to a change in the international order, and one which Japan - as keenly affected by events in the Soviet Union as any European country - feels ill-placed to influence. For historical reasons, Japan is sensitive to any hint of a resumption of the old Axis link, even in a wholesome multilateral guise. Tokyo has no intention of applying for membership of Nato. That would involve unthinkable changes to Japan's postwar constitution, which renounces collective security, military engagement beyond Japanese borders, and nuclear weapons. But the Japanese government is actively angling for some formal consultative status with Nato, involvement in East-West negotiations on arms reductions and association in any development of Nato's political

Last month, Japan attended a Nato seminar for the first time, and used the opportunity to stake its claim to be involved in formulating Western policies towards Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. On Tuesday the Japanese foreign minister, Taro Nakayama, saw Manfred Wörner, Nato's secretary-general, and invited him to visit Japan. Two considerations lie behind these diplomatic moves. Japan feels more and more isolated, with little political weight to match its economic muscle. It also believes that, since the United States cannot continue as the lynchpin of the international economic and political order, the "three poles" of Japan, Europe and America must work together more closely. That is why Mr Nakayama has suggested building a political partnership on a global basis" with the European Community. There is increasing frustration in Tokyo that West Germany, erstwhile partner in the defeated Axis, was drawn by its geographical position into two groupings, Nato and the European Community, which gave Bonn politically innocuous theatres for the exercise of influence to match its economic strength. Japan, an island, was under no such compulsion and for a long time was content to prosper beneath the shelter of the US security umbrella, only too happy to be a country without a foreign policy".

The West has long been disturbed by this state of affairs. Involving Japan in dialogue has been an important objective of Western economic summits. Thinking in Tokyo has now been transformed by tension in its relations with the United States. Japan is also worried that the West is under-rating the instability in the Soviet Union, and neglecting the security of Asia, where Japanese analysts observe no signs of Soviet military perestroika, and where the Cold War lingers over China and Taiwan, the two Koreas, and Indochina. Tokyo no longer finds annual economic summits an adequate sounding board. Japan was thoroughly alarmed when the super-power negotiations on medium-range nuclear weapons (Intermediate Nuclear Forces) came close to agreeing simply to move Soviet missiles east of the Urals. It is at one with China in its concern lest East-West arms reductions, coupled with American plans to scale down US forces in the Pacific, tempt the Soviet Union to flex its military strength there. Japan cannot afford either to ignore such a development, or to alarm its Asian neighbours by a military build-up and change in defence structure and strategy. The West must provide a comfortable place in the post-Cold War world for a country with twice West Germany's population and national product. Japan has a legitimate interest in Nato, or whatever European defence arrangements replace it. Japan's Western allies know well how dangerous an isolated Japan can be; they should offer Tokyo the assured status it

THE NONSENSE OF SHOOT-OUT

England's departure from the World Cup was in the fine tradition of British sportsmanship. The team played better in defeat than ever in victory, rising above a backdrop of mayhem and bad publicity to bring home a moral triumph. They were beaten not so much by the better side on the night, but by the conservatism of a game whose nationalist appeal has been exploited out of all proportion. England were knocked out of the cup without losing a single game. Argentina, a mediocre team, reached the final having scored just four goals in five games, only two of which they won after losing their opening match. A scoring system which so patently fails to reflect the balance of skill, effort and quality in those playing is seriously defective. Football's rulers owe it to international relations as well as to sport to reform the now inadequate rules to enable winning and losing to have some basis in equity. The concept of the penalty shoot-out following a draw in extra time could easily have been abandoned in favour of corners, which are a reasonable indication of territorial advantage and aggression. Corners would have put Germany into the final over England by 10-9. Italy would also have gone through against Argentina by 7-4. Penalties have always been a bizarre form of punishment, since the distance from goal is so short as to make scoring much more a matter of luck than of skill. Even a judging panel, as in gymnastics or the pools panel, would be preferable to a shootout. It would be gratifying if a drawn final on Sunday could be left as precisely that, without the arbitrariness of penalties. A world championship gained that way would be a hollow adjust their rules to the evolving skills of those who play them. English cricket has changed to try to create a better balance between bat and ball; athletics to meet the greater strength of javelin throwers; tennis to complete sets which might otherwise go on indefinitely. Rugby has had more trouble, with an increasing number of games being decided by who concedes fewer penalties, a clear sign of failure on the part of law-makers.

Football has seen defence improve at the expense of attack. At present, after one goal the leading team retreats into defence. One conceivable answer to this would be to widen the goal posts, yielding higher scores than the dreary succession of 0-0, 1-0 and 1-1. Anything which brought higher scores would enable the result to reflect more closely the relative quality of the teams, be less frustrating for players (except goal-keepers) and be more entertaining for spectators. They would yield fairer results. There is nothing absolute, for instance, in the 24-feet width of a football goal only the conservatism with which football's rulers treat every aspect of the game.

Football, with its apogee in the World Cup, is an integral part of a nation's selfconsciousness. It can raise or destroy the morale of whole peoples, as the valiant Cameroonians know well. The cost of maintaining order, the damage to community relations, the tourist pollution, the expenditure of political and human emotion renders the inadequacies of the football industry a serious matter of public policy. Football makes big money out of exploiting nationalist feeling. It is more than just a game. The industry has some obligation to manage its affairs with common sense. Penalty shoot-outs are not unlikely scenarios in Europe.

From Admiral of the Fleet Lord

Sir, I become increasingly dismayed by media coverage of defence policy, the latest by Professor Robert O'Neill (article July 4), that ignores completely the maritime dimension. In the current debate there seems to be an obsessive preoccupation with the central front, where as long as Nato maintained its deterrent strength, backed by a policy of flexible response, there was no likelihood of Warsaw Pact attack, and now that alliance has disintegrated the threat has virtually disappeared. Yet the Soviet Union possesses maritime forces equivalent in strength to the United States, if of a different composition. Last year saw an accession of strength to the Soviet fleet of a record tonnage of new and powerful surface warships while in the last five years there has been a 12 per cent increase in the number of nuclear attack submarines. This fleet still exists and the oceans of the world are open before them.

Your commentators should perhaps be reminded that in the last two world wars shipping was the vital resource on the availability of which victory depended. In both we were brought near to defeat by unrestricted submarine warfare. Virtually all the world's trade is carried by sea and it is for the safeguarding of this commerce that we should be concerned,

Council reform

From Councillor N. J. W. Wilson Sir, I do not wish to fall out with my colleagues at the Association of County Councils, but we of the Association of District Councils are keen to debate the issues of detail that flow from our conviction of the need to establish local government structures closer to the people, though I hope we can do so on rather less outdated arguments than those deployed by John Spence and Bill Dixon Smith

(June 30). John Spence's case, based on the arger size of counties, carried little conviction when reorganisation was undertaken in 1974 and is now generally recognised to

It has been recognised that much greater efficiency can be achieved by a diversity of service provision, sometimes using external contractors or voluntary agents, sometimes by combining with other local authorities, and sometimes undertaking provision directly. Bill Dixon Smith takes as read the cost of a reorganisation. Recent research undertaken for our association demonstrates the real opportunities for cost reductions, thanks to cutting out the duplication of joint working with

From Mr D. L. Giles Sir, In September, 1985, I took the precaution of suggesting to Com-mander Michael Ranken, secretary to the Hales trustees, that he should visit the present custodians of the Hales Trophy Blue Riband of the Atlantic - the US Merchant Marine Academy - to obtain a copy of the trust deed of the trophy.

This was in order to ensure that the Hales Trophy Trust should continue under English law; and in order to avoid the confusion and argument which has characterised the tortured history of the America's Cup, the equivalent of the Hales Trophy in the field of sailing yacht design. Thanks to the original wording of the deed, the situation is abundantly clear. The Hales Trophy was never intended to be restricted to ocean liners. It was to be awarded to that "ship" which could make one of the specified transatlantic voyages at the highest average speed, without undue risk to the ship or her passengers or crew. Its award was at the discretion of a board of trustees, properly constituted under the laws of England, which was able to set the conditions for any challenge doubtless to accord with such changed circumstances as apply today - since it was the express intention of Harold K. Hales to encourage the "craft of speed" in marine engineering.

The Hoverspeed Great Britain (report, June 25) has done well and, under these circumstances, her owners richly deserve the trophy if, in the opinion of the present trustees, she has met the required conditions of entry. Yours faithfully,

Back pain treatment From Dr T. W. Meade

Sir, The misrepresentations of our low back pain trial by Mr Hurley (June 23) and Mrs Wise (June 13) are in no one's interests, including those of their physiotherapist colleagues. The interests of patients seem to be taking second place.

Mrs Wise agrees that manipulation can be an effective treatment. However, what she omits to point out is that the technique often used by chiropractors is very different from the less successful techniques used by most hospital physiotherapists. Properly trained chiropractors are no less able than physiotherapists to judge when manipulation may be dangerous. Mr Hurley objects to the different patterns of treatment in the two management groups: but it was precisely to see whether these patterns differed in their effectiveness that the trial was carried out. One of our reasons for adopting chiropractic component of a trial of specific techniques. Our trial showed a highly significant benefit finding that clearly warrants further study But the process of

Maritime role in balance of power Shifting the focus on family life

From Mr Ian Taylor, MP for Esher (Conservative)

هكذامن الأحل

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sir, Like much that has been written recently on the family, Martin Jacques's article, "Family in a state of flux" (June 27), is short on prescription. By merely describing what the present position is and focusing on the consequences he fails to grasp that we must do more to ease the growing misery that is the consequence of the break-up of family relationships - the musery of the children, the misery of the individual partners, the financial and emotional distress, and the creation of homelessness with all the despair and hopelessness that that brings. "Vain attempts to roll back history", would, I agree, be futtle, and few on the right are seriously suggesting it. But no responsible government should be prepared to float idly by on a rising tide of ever-increasing divorce and illegitimacy rates without some attempt to rescue the values it believes important in society.

"Flexibility" in family life can be welcome, but not if its sole effect is to undermine the cohesion that families create.

This eaunot be overstated. We need to shift the focus. There is a role for government to play, but we should not judge government policies on their ability to create family and community loyalties, but rather on the extent to which they set the parameters for sustainable family life and help to remove the obstacles that stand in the way to the fulfilment of that goal. Many initiatives are in the pipeline - on parental responsibility, on powers for courts to enforce maintenance orders, on how children can be better protected under divorce arrangements and on more help to voluntary bodies providing marriage counselling. The debate is taking place almost exclusively on the right of British politics, which shows where true concern for these matters lies. Yours faithfully, IAN TAYLOR,

Parks for Scotland

From Sir Andrew Gilchrist Sir, Marion Shoard (article, June 30) contemplates the dreadful state of the Scottish environment and comes forward with some remarkable remedial proposals The Caimgorms, the Western Isles and various bog-lands are said to be the United Kingdom's equivalent for the Amazonian rain-forests, and indeed it seems that the inhabitants of Scotlan are on a par with the pallid and impotent tribes of that area, unfit to be trusted with any environmental responsibilities whatever Nothing rouses Miss Shoard's contempt so much as the concept of "a Scottish solution for Scottish

School meetings From Mrs Amanda Gaines Sir, At the annual meeting of governors and parents held recently at our children's primary school, we were dismayed to find ourselves deemed inquorate, because our numbers were not equal to 20 per cent of the pupils currently on the school roll. Given that a school numbering 400 pupils may have fewer than 200 or more than 700 parents, this seems a particularly inequable formula for calculating attendance. A much fairer system would use a calculation based on the number of families represented (whether by one or both parents). Yours faithfully. AMANDA GAINES. 17 Granby Avenue, Harpenden. Hertfordshire June 29.

randomisation within each referral clinic resulted in two treatment groups whose psychological characteristics were identical.

Patients who cannot afford chiropractic privately can reasonably claim that they are being denied an effective treatment. It is obviously difficult for physiotherapists to accept that they may not be as good as chiropractors in the management of low back pain; but if chiropractors do have a worthwhile contribution to make - and there is little doubt about this - they should be enabled to do so through the NHS.

ANDREW GILCHRIST, Arthur's Crag. Hazelbank, by Lanark. July I. From Mr P. J Barlow

Sir, I am chairman of our local community council. Much of our time is taken up by debates on planning applications and pro-posals for development which inevitably throw into relief the conflict between the demand for iobs, houses and services on one side and protection of our uniquely beautiful landscape and

MICHAEL ANNALS

Michael Annals, stage designer, has died aged 52. He was born on April 21, 1938.

AROUND 1970 Michael Annals was one of the most sought after among British stage designers. He had ac-quired the reputation of being able to dazzle visually when required, but also of being a considerable technician and one of the earliest "structural" artists who could produce a solid set with a sound knowledge of what could and could not be demanded of the stage on which he was working. He was the great professionals, delivering on time and without fuss.

His problem was that he flowered brilliantly and a bit too early. He was only 25 when the late John Dexter Defence Liaison Staff (Brigadier Colin Curleigh) was present at the airport to bid farewell to His Royal Highness on behalf of engaged him, on the basis of the sets he had provided for St Joan, to design Peter Shaffer's The Royal Hunt of the Sun for the National Theatre at the Chichester Festival. So when July 5: The Princess Royal this morning visited Chipping Campden School and was received by Her Majesty's Lord Lieutenant for Gloucestershire (Colonel Martin St. J. Gibbs). he was 26 Annals, who had been encouraged by Michael Benthall, had his first big success. His sets glittered in the Peruvian epic and he even tackled Shaffer's famous stage direction "They climb the Andes.

The success of Royal Hunt took Annals to Broadway for the production there. He was to spend a certain amount of time in America, both as a stage designer and as a lecturer in the subject, at Yale University. More importantly, though, it established him with the National Theatre in its days at the Old Vic, which is where Royal Hunt moved after Chichester. He was responsible for the visual side of around a dozen productions there, which ranged from the almost brutal newspaper office of The Front Page to the prettiness of W. S. Gilbert's Engaged, where the Annals's sets were reckoned to be the best contribution to a play

AMONG the most prolific if not, indeed, the most proliffic - of her country's many modern novelists, Silvina Bullrich was undoubtedly a woman's writer". But she wrote well in clear and direct prose on her chosen subject, the sexual sufferings of women and with a keen and unmistakably individual intelligence. It was not her fault that she was overshadowed by the undoubtedly more gifted fellow Argentine woman novelist, Beatriz Guido.

Silvina Bullrich made her mark in 1941 with Su-vida y Yo (Your Life and I) vividly narrated by a man in love with an unstable woman. This had been preceded in 1939 by La Calle (The Street). In 1952 she published her best known book. Bodas de Cristal (Crysof a woman's meditation on the 15 years of her marriage, while her husband sleeps. Telefono Occupado. ON THIS DAY

Princes and a dozen dukes with their ladies headed the list of more than 400 invited to King George IV's ball. Lords and ladies were two a penny. and almost lost among the plethora of titles were two commoners and future prime ministers, Mr Canning and Mr Peel, heir to Sir Robert the first barone£

> THE KING'S BALL (Further Particulars)

We yesterday mentioned shortly, that the grand Gala Ball for some days spoken of with anxious expectation and delight in the fashionable world, as intended to be given by His Majesty, took place on Monday night at St. James's Palace, in the new and beautiful suit of apartments lately erected upon the ruins of a part of this ancient structure. The company, after being set down at the colonnade entering by the new iron gate near Mariborough-house, proceeded along an elegantly lighted and matted passage to a spacious hall lined by the Yeomen of the Guard, and thence to a magnificent flight of stairs. Having ascended these, they passed along a spacious gallery to what, on state and court days, is called the Presencechamber, but in which, on this occasion, was stationed the King's band, which played during the arrival of the company. In this and the adjoining room the company promenaded, and were supplied by the pages in waiting with refreshments from a suit of tables laid out in one of the galleries, until about 11 o'clock, when they were summoned to the dance. This took place in the chamber which on court-days is called the ante-room, and which on this occasion was the ball-room. Here an elegant orchestre was fitted up on the south side of the room. About one o'clock the magnificent banquetingroom, which runs almost parallel with the three rooms already mentioned, from east to west, the whole being on one floor, was thrown open for supper, and displayed a scene of the most brilliant description. The iables ran along the north and south sides of the room, the whole length, close by the crimson, satin-covered settees which ornament this apartment, and a cross table at the western extremity, over which was a beaufet, on which was displayed the most conspicuous part of the gold plate, beautifully arranged. There were several splendid vases round the room, containing various liquids of refreshing odour, and a rich supply of plants and flowers from Kew-gardens, so tastefully distributed as to produce the most agreeable effect. The supper, which was of the most exquisite and costly kind, was what is called a standing supper, very few taking seats on the occasion. As we vesterday mentioned, His Majesty did not sup in this room, but in a private apartment with the members of the Royal Family; and His Majesty retired altogether about 2 o'clock. In the course of the evening, however, His Majesty in the most affable and gratifying manner peid his attention to his guests in the different apartments. The whole of the company had not retired until past 4 o'clock. A guard of honour commanded by Colonel Short, of the Grenadier Guards, was stationed in the Courtyard of the Palace, with the band which played at intervals during the evening. A detachment of the 2nd Life Guards, also, was stationed at the bottom of St. James's street. commanded by Captain Bath. This is said to be the first of a series of five mlendid halls designed to be given by His Majesty this season.

. Amongst those who were distinguished by an invitation to this splendid entertainment, in the whole amounting to between 400 and 500 persons of the first distinction in the empire were the following - Of the Royal Family, the Duke of York, Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Princess Augusta, attended by Lady Mary Taylor, the Duchess of Kent. attended by Mademoiselle Speth; Princess Feodor, Prince Leopold, the Duke and Duchess of Glocester, and Princess Sophia of Glocester, the Duke of Brunswick, and Prince of Brunswick; Duke of Montrose, and two Ladies Graham ...

Arms and the Coventry

he people of Coventry have an ambivalent relationship with defence. On the night of November 14 1940, the bombers of the Luftwaffe were dispatched to the city to create terrible devastation with a huge air

At the same time arms - along with motor cars - were and are responsible for Coventry's bread and butter. Now, with their skilled jobs threatened by cutbacks in defence spending in the wake of improved East-West relations, its people are beginning to question, if not bite, the hand that feeds them. Through trade unionbacked organisations such as Coventry Alternative Employment Research, they are demanding that defence companies look more closely at civilian markets.

A company at the leading edge of this dilemma is Rolls-Royce, where John Coplin, six years old when his home was hit in the Coventry raid, is the managing director of Rolls-Royce Business Ventures, at Ansty, just outside the city. The company was set up in March 1989 to "grow" new businesses outside its parent company's main product range, the production of gas turbine engines for civilian and military customers. An early product, a high-tech signature verification machine, has recently Bank. It uses aero engine technology to verify a person's signature.

Mr Coplin is wary of giving much away. "At Rolls-Royce, we only like to speak about products once we've achieved something." But Business Ventures clearly has a major part to play in Rolls-Royce's attempts to

Only a quarter of the parent company's turnover now comes directly from defence, even though it is one of Britain's three largest defence contractors, along with British AeroCan the arms makers of the Midlands turn their swords to ploughshares? Andrew Lycett reports space and GEC. Last month, the Ministry of Defence cancelled an order worth £530 million for 33 Tornado strike aircraft. The company principally affected is British Aerospace, which makes the Tornado, but Rolls-Royce is vulnerable, too, as supplier of the RB199 engine. As part of a defence review, Alan Clark, the minister for defence procurement, is committed to lopping £1 billion off the £21 billion defence budget. At risk are projects like the new generation of Rolls-Royce powered Type 23 frigates for the Royal Navy.

Other local employers in defence include GEC, Lucas Aerospace, Courtaulds, Alvis and Dunlop. Attempts to initiate "conversion" projects away from defence from the shopfloor have not been promising. Faced with the prospect of 4,000 redundancies in the mid-Seventies, workers at Lucas Aerospace put forward a comprehensive plan designed to use their own skills and the company's military technology for civilian projects. Among their 150 proposals were a combined road/rail vehicle, a heat pump, a long-life exercise for children with spina bifida. Lucas Aerospace manas rejected the plans as unrealistic.

Now, defence companies themselves are beginning to look at diversification. Dave Nellist, Labour MP for Coventry South East, says: "Until recently they have had no reason to budge. They have been feather-bedded with long-term defence contracts, often on a cost-plus basis." At Rolls-Royce Business Ventures, Mr Coplin says: "The biggest single opportunity is the environment and low emissions. There are things to do with guns which could make better plants and better people." Invited to elaborate, he says: "No, definitely not, it is all extremely sensitive." One idea apparently involves using electro-magnetic propulsion, the way guns will be fired in the 21st century, to bind particles and materials together.

On the other side of Coventry, Brian White, managing director of Alvis, is more direct about his experiences of diversification. Until very recently his company, now a subsidiary of United Scientific Holdings, was almost 100 per cent dependent on defence contracts, largely for Scorpion light armoured vehicles, 2,000 of which are now in service with the British Army. However, as Scorpion orders have been completed, the company has had to diversify. With the workforce falling from

1,700 in 1982 to 750 today, Alvis won a £15 million contract to provide computerised gunnery simulators to the army. Outside defence, it called on in-house skills in 1988 to win a £1 million contract to manufacture aircraft. Last year it secured a similar order for the new Airbus. Now it is hoping to win more civilian aerospace contracts. Recently it has acquired the rights to a robotic bomb detector. Mr White even talks guardedly about reviving car making - Alvis was a motor manufacturer from 1920 to today to 20 per cent in three years. However, it is not easy to diversify quickly, he says. Alvis has to build on its existing technology. It cannot immediately manufacture new products, like kidney machines, as has been demanded by the more radical exponents of the "peace dividend".

Mr White believes his company has anticipated the rest of the defence industry in the move to diversify. He expects the percentage of its turnover outside defence to rise from 5 per cent.

Other defence companies are making moves to new markets, but those are never far removed from their proven fields of expertise. British Aerospace is developing a laser gyroscope for civilian use which was pioneered in fighter planes. Dowty is bullish about a series of products, such as smoke-hoods, safety air-bags for cars, and "ballistic protection", developed by its polymer engineering division. GEC has given over a whole factory, once making isolator shelters for military radar, to satellite dishes. The workforce is down from 400 to 80. but the company expects to manufacture over one million units

Mr Nellist says the process is too slow, too little, too late. Workforces should be pressing their managements to move into new product areas, like high-tech medical instruments, he says. Otherwise their jobs will simply go. The Labour party is committed to setting up a defence diversification agency, which will use government ntracts to help companies move from defence to other fields.

Some observers say defence com-panies are so hidebound by the bureaucracy and quality controls needed to meet Ministry of Defence requirements that they cannot compete in the open market. Mr Coplin disagrees. He sees Rolls-Royce's MOD link as a strength. "High quality is the route to low cost production, he says confidently, and he hangs an MOD quality assurance cortificate over his door to prove it.

Prejudice has followed India's untouchables across the seas or more than 1,000 years they have been called "untouchables", the lowest of the low. In the Thirties Mahatma Gandhi renamed them Harijans, people or children of God. In Britain they live under the name Ravidassai, after the prophet they follow, but it amounts to the same thing a poor and despised group labouring under a social stigma it cannot change. But now Indian outcasts in the Midlands are trying to establish their own identity. The Home Office has no record of how many Harijans there are in Britain, but in Derby, 2,000 of them live in a square mile of Victorian terraces between Pear Tree Road and Normanton Road. For two years they have been fighting to get their own community centre built, and today they will hear the city council's final decision.

Derby already has a spacious Indian community centre, and another for the Pakistani community, but the Harijans say they have not been welcome at either. The

because we are always at the bottom of the pile." In India untouchability has been outlawed, but it still exists. In England the Harijans are not only untouchable but unmentionable. Mustapha Fyed, Derby's equal opportunities officer, says: "Officially they do not exist. Anyone who talks about them will be ostracised and accused of betraying the community as a whole. In practice, there is wide discrimination against them within the Asian community. They are an extremely disadvantaged group, they lack self esteem, and

The complexity of the community relations business, where factions compete for money, is partly responsible for this silence. At the Asian Over-60s Association, which serves Derby's 16,000 Indians and 12,000 Pakistanis, Jenail Birring, the development officer, says: "There is no caste system any more, in India or here. Everyone is equal."

At a centre called Education for All, Jaswant Gerwal, the head of culture and language, seems upset by the very idea.

"There is no shoe caste here [chamar, the shoe caste, is one of the groups of untouch-ables]. The only problem we have is racism from the outside community."

Harry Mohe, aged 35, a restaurant owner, says he has found his freedom by separating himself from other Asians. He lives with his wife and three daughters in a fivebedroomed house.

"If I was living in India I would be making shoes or sweeping the streets," he says. "Here my biggest advantage is that most Indians in Derby don't know me, so they can't environment department has don't know me, so they can't offered them £167,000 for a tell what I am. I am safe because of British law, but socially it is Mehngaram Sund, who be difficult. It is just not possible the constant taunts is suffered.

"Because British people have not mixed with Asians much, the communities have remained very conservative." he says. "They are often worse in these matters than people in the Punjab. The council says it is responding to a need. That is true, but the ultimate aim should surely be a pluralistic approach. They don't really seem to be interested in tackling the problem."

Robin Wood, a Derby coun-cillor, disagrees. "The Sikhs and other Indians say that the untouchables can use the existing centre and temples, but that is not true. Untouchables are a community, with the same need to identify Nick Brown, the leader of the Conservative-controlled council, is also fond of cosy analogies to describe the caste system. "Lancastrians would have the same problem if they settled in Derby," he says. "Separate ethnic groups need separate community centres." Asked to define ethnic more clearly, he says: "We don't condone the caste system, but it would only make things worse in the community to come out and say so."-The complex needs of politicians are far removed from the reality. Jaytar Ruttur. Kufvinder's husband, aged 20, says: "I left college because of this year.

Hunting, praying and disputing

The Church picks up the scent of trouble over fox-hunting across its land

TOMORROW night the Genference at York, will debate a controversial private member's motion proposed by the Archdeacon of Colchester.

The motion calls for "just treatment of animals as an ssential part of our responsibility towards creation", and the third section invites the Church commissioners to review critically hunting for sport on Church land. Since more than 150,000 acres of the country are owned by the Church of England, this suggestion has angered many members of the fox-hunting fraternity, and offended churchgoers and clergymen who support and participate ic the sport

The archdeacon sees his proposal as a means of initiating debate on animal rights within the Church. "I think this is an area where the Church may take some lead," he says, "it is not just about hunting, it is about wanton killing and factory farming and the Church needs to get its act together on these issues."

But the motion has divided Church opinion. The Bishop of Chelmsford's comments in favour of banning fox-hunting on Church land have prompted many churchgoers to complain. In reply, the bishop has sought to calm arguments by explaining that "whilst I supported the archdeacon's attempt to secure a debate, I am almost totally ignorant of the subject of foxhunting". Paul Dixey, former chairman of Lloyd's and chairman of the Essex Hunt,

bishop can have offended so many people while professing such ignorance of the matter in hand".

In a recent letter to the Church Times, the Rev Richard Acworth, of Barnstaple, has expressed his opposition to the motion, and Stephen Lambert, a third-year or-dinand, will go to York to support the hunting frateroity. John Drew, secretary and treasurer of the Essex Foxhounds, says: "At the mofarm the land who decide, and it should be up to them to choose whether they want the hunt coming across their fields." The archdeacon dis-agrees. "I think that, as a landlord, the Church should want to make sure that the tenants of the land are using it in the correct manner. I think that this issue has parallels with slavery — that, too, existed for many centuries, and was an important part of the economy, but it took somebody making the first move to eradicate it."

Even if the motion is carried, it may be impossible to implement until the current leases are due for renewal. Mr Dixey explains: "Under the current leases, the tenants hold sporting rights to the land. The Church simply couldn't take a tenant to court for permitting his friends to cross the land in pursuit of a perfectly legal sport. The ten-ants would tell them, in coclestastical terms, to get lost."

The second world war devastated them, and then came 40 years of Stalin and scientific socialism,

The response to this could have been anger, perhaps even revenge. But it is as if this society, having tried everything vile known to man, now wishes to see (perhaps only out of exhaustion) whether decency and patience can work, "It's our only chance," said a young man working behind the desk of my hotel. Who knows? On Hungarian television recently the names were read out of former secret policemen who had tortured and murdered prisoners in the last two or three years of prime minister Janos Kadar's so-called "goulash communism". "There are a lot of people sitting very quietly," said poet George Faludy.

Mr Faludy is in his late seventies now. and lives in a flat in the Buda Hills. In the Thirties he captivated Hungarian intellectual life with his free-ranging translations of Villon's sonnets. In 1938 his Jewish ancestry and Social Democratic politics provoked the Nazis into burning his books. Mr Faludy escaped to America. After the war, he returned to help build a new Hungary. Inevitably, he ended up in the only place for a good man in an indecent society — Stalin's concentration camps. The communists pulped his books.

Mr Faludy survived the camps, escaped to the West in 1957 and came back to Hungary two years ago. When societies are reconstructing themselves there is always a need for a maker of moral compasses. Mr Faludy is there with his ineffably beautiful sonnets, to remind human beings of the categorical imperative that exists within each man. The Hungarians have responded to him with a hunger normally seen only in the groupies of rock stars: it speaks to the truly remarkable appetite of the people for two staples that have been in very short supply truth and beauty.

Still, Mr Faludy, like many others, has his problems: his enemies in the old regime still sit unsmiling in all sorts of jobs in the bureaucracy. The grim lady colonel who first grudgingly gave out forms for identity cards is now wearing a Mickey Mouse T-shirt instead of a uniform, but the change is more cosmetic than real. The dour apparatchik who processes Mr Faludy's residency papers has managed to hold up their issuance on a thousand and one technicalities. The people who ran the old regime, its system and thinking are still in place, and totally permeate the country. They keep their heads low and, if questioned, will embrace what is referred to as the "new thinking". But it is skin deep for some of them. "There is a real traffic jam on the road to Damascus," said writer Peter Esterbazy, summing up the situation.

My former mother-in-law, Magda, formidable woman of 85 years of age and the reason for my visit to Budapest, sits cheerfully in her bed in a military hospital nursing her broken hip. There outside temperature is a stifling 103° and all her ward has is one sink and a small refrigerator in which visitors put drinks for the patients. The old woman in the bed next to her is dying of the same ailment — a broken hip - and her toes have turned a sort of elephant grey. "You mustn't watch her," Madga admonishes me.

The room has made up rules to give it the provacy that the crowded quarters prevent. The old women lie half-naked and dehydrated in their beds, while relatives wash and clean them. We don't exchange glances. Presents are brought by visitors: a jam-jar full of thick brown sludge that is a cup of hot coffee; a plastic bag full of little individual portions of jam taken from a hotel; a towel. The hospital is without money and has insufficient beds. Short of people shooting at them, the staff are working under field conditions. One is struck by the extraordinary effort of everyone to be courteous and once Magda must leave the hospital in a few days but she is immobilized for six months. How will she live? In the old days it was simple: one could count on party or personal corruption to get her a place in a special hospital. But now there is some pride and sense of fairness, all muddled up with a confused attitude about money Orwell was right: if you debase language, people can't think. Who trusts these new concepts called democracy and freedom and free enterprise? Wasn't democracy what the party called democratic centralism? Freedom was what the communists shouted at their rallies. The Hungarians have a total weariness when they hear of any system of government or of economics.

A quick tour of Hungary This is 60 Andrassy Street. Once it was Stalin Street. Before that it was a row of restaurants featuring chambres reparées where young bucks sipped coffee with beautiful women and fondled their thighs. Then the chambres of seduction became the interrogation chambers of the AVO secret police, where George Faludy hung by his elbows till he lost consciousness. Now it is an espresso bar with yellow striped umbrellas.

There is the Military Tribunal on Fo utza where Kadar held all the teenagers who took part in the 1956 revolution The Hungarian constitution prohibited the death sentence on youngsters and so Kadar kept them there till, on their eighteenth birthday, they could be marched out and shot: a birthday present from the leader the West so admired Hungarians claim that at the end Kadar came to the Central Committee drunk and crying: "I am a murderer." Will that happen to Mr Gorbachev, one wonders? Will he remember all the steps he took? There is the beginning of envy here, too. Under totalitarianism there is no envy, only hatred and fear. Now new hierarchies are forming based on wealth and achievement, and envy can edge out the other emotions. Can Hungary survive? The mythical Hungarian bird, the turul, looks down from Buda castle. It is the symbol of right-wing nationalism which not even the communists dared destroy. The new government is under enormous pressure from the sort of right-wingers and extreme nationalists who hate communism but not authoritarianism. Authoritarianism has become so ingrained in the life of the state, with its notion of repression and idea of state interference in the life of the citzen, that some are loath to let go. The government is trying to resist the voices and the people are trying to make a new start. But whoever said a shipwreck was easy?

Do tranquillisers spread more anguish than calm? Anne-Marie Sapsted reports

And yet it was 20 years before serious doubts were slow to change, and in any raised by Professor Malcolm case, for many it was already Lader at the Institute of Psychiatry. His research side-effects, but more disturb-ing were his findings that the drugs could in certain cases promote a physical dependency almost as strong as that

The story adds up to a showed that there were some major medical disaster, according to Larry Neild, whose book Escape from Tranquillisers and Sleeping Pills is published next week. Mr Neild claims this is a worse story, in terms of people damaged, than the thalidomide disaster. Estimates of around two million tranquilstill more than 20 million liser addicts in this country alone are generally accepted speak the same language.

A man complains: "I'm really tired. I didn't sleep well last night." His wife will reply: "I didn't sleep well either. I never do." He snaps: "Why are you trying to belittle me?" Deborah Tannen, a professor of sociolinguistics, says this is a typical example of the crosscultural clash that stems from the contrasting ways the two genders treat language. Women, Ms Tannen says, express sympathy by implying shared experience; men do so by implying, "your problems aren't so bad". This illustration is one of many that Ms Tannen uses to explain those habits and attirudes which the two sexes find so infuriating and mystifying in each other: from the way men believe women nag. gossip and manipulate, to the almost universal behef among women that their husbands and lovers often do not want to listen to them and flinch from talking about emotions. Ms Tannen, who has made a name as a decoder of everyday conversation, has now published You Just Don't Understand, a study of what she believes women and men really mean when they talk to each other.

Combining scientific analysis with a novelist's ear for conversation Ms Tannen ar gues that, from their earliest years, women see conversation as a glue for cementing intimacy, which they consider the fabric of relationships. For them, "marriage is an orgy of closeness: you can tell your ferent approaches is that. while women laugh at jokes just as much as men, they tend to forget them. "Since they are not driven to hold centre stage in a group, they do not need a store of jokes to whip out for this purpose," Ms Tannen says.

Even in intense conversa-

When women tell men: "You aren't listening," and the men pro-test: "I am," the men are right, Ms Tannen says. "The impression of not listening results from misalgoments in the mechanics of conversation. The misalignment begins as soon as a man and a woman take physical positions."

Women choose an oblique, feminine way, rather than the direct male way, of expressing their wishes. A man, for example, may fail to pick up the signal when a women enquires: "Are you thirsty?" see conversation as a way of This really means: "I am affirming their rank in a thirsty." Men see this as an example of female failure to get to the point.

On the subject of interruption. Ms Tannen says women fail to realise that the feminine habit of completing the other person's seniences, or elaborating a point in a story to show sympathy, is interpreted by men as an attempt to take moderal of the multiple of all the > owever, the good thing about fashion is that it does change. After the variously violent assertions of art in the Eighties, it suddenly seems good to cool the frenzy with the elegance and control of an artist like Gabo. This show, which is on till September 29, does give the neophyte a very clear idea of who Gabo was and what he was about. The effect is, as usual with this gallery, enhanced by a thick, scholarly and informative catalogue. But naturally the effect of this art, as of all art, is dependent primarily on the evidence of the eye. Here, at least, Gabo was Apart from some very early works - the first in the show is a touching, aesthetic self-portrait gazing into a pink flower, dating from 1905-12 - Gabo was almost entirely dedicated to construction. Sometimes it was construction conceived in wholly abstract terms, taking its ideas from plane geometry and intricate mathematical projections, but also construction in the sense of discovering the skull beneath the skin, how living objects were put together and what secret mechanics made them work. The most obvious example of this approach in the show is the large Constructed Head No 2, dating from Gabo's last, American period and made of cor-ten steel, painted grey-green. Here the shape of the head and shoulders is unmistakable, as is the pose, leaning slightly, attentively forward. But the facets into which the overall shape is divided are completely abstract, unconnected allogether with bones and musculature. And yet the illusion of meaningful structure is complete.

Another important late work, Torsion. Variation (1974-75), comes as construction from the other end. Here the delicately balanced structure gives the effect of turning slowly in space by the illusion of stainless steel springwire strained in curving cascades from one section of the pierced stainless steel structure to another. Torsion may give the impression of all passion spent, but one never feels that at any stage there was no passion there: it is a matter of tight control rather than spinning webs over a void. And if Gabo had, by the end of his wandering life, achieved a certain tranquillity, he surely deserved it.

Driven by politics and his own temperament from Russia to Mumich to Scandinavia, then back to Russia on to Berlin, Paris, England (which he rather liked, owing to the congenial company of the St Ives group) and finally America. he managed to carry with him an amazing amount of physical baggage, often in the form of demounted works in boxes and bundles. This explains labels say-ing things like "1919, reassembled 1985". There is something moving about these little pieces of wire and plastic, carried round so long, to so many countries, only at long last to be put together again and brought back to life.

And life is the operative word. For all their coolness and apparent emotional distance, there is never any thing sterile or inhuman about even Gabo's most geometrical pieces. They hum with secret life; they make one understand why Pure Mathematics is classified as an art rather than a science. And if they are cool, one can think of no finer corrective for a degree of overbeating in the artistic system right now. This may not be the latest fashion, but it could very easily be the next. --

Hanging matters

AFTER the triumphant success of the recent Tate Gallery rehang, it is perhaps not surprising that rehang fever seems to be gripping the major London collections. The National Gallery announced yesterday that it will carry out a complete shake-up of its collections, to coincide with the opening early next year of the new Sainsbury Wing. That follows hard on the heels of the Courtauld Collection's new arrangement in Somerset House. -The National Gallery's decision is not before time. Norman Rosenthal once explained to me that the Royal Academy's version of the Murillo show was so much better arranged than the Prado's because the Academy is in the business of putting on great shows, whereas the Prado is only in the business of being the Prado.

Our own National Gallery has tended to take rather the same line: with a collection specifically devoted to masterpieces. what does the way they are arranged matter? So the hanging has been left mainly to the divisional curators, many of whom seem to know the history of everything and how to display nothing. Neil MacGregor, still a relative newcomer as gallery director, is having none of that. Even the most wonderful pictures can be dimmed by bad lighting and unimaginative juxtaposition, as well as being made stale by showing always in the same old. expected context. The idea of the rehang is simple but revolutionary away with the circumscribing arrangement by national schools, and instead a chronological hang which will take full account of international crosscurrents and the complexity of art at any given period, or even sometimes within any given year.

That is rather what the Musee d'Orsay in Paris promised at its own planning stage. Then the management chickened out of it. There, the vision of a "new 19th century" in which Symbolists and Academic borderers on kitsch would be mixed with contemporary impressionists and Post-Impressionists, was jettisoned at the last moment, and the rule of the school remained supreme.

If the National Gallery carries everything through as planned, it will invigorate all our responses as much as did the Tate's selective hang. That emphasised the links between the Brits and the Moderns, (instead of pointlessly lamenting that the gallery was born with two heads) and rotated as much of the collection as possible. The National Gallery can still show all its collections at once. Now it will also be able to show them off.

Royal gems from an Englishman abroad

Andrew Gibbon

Williams visits an exhibition of Venetian drawings

in Edinburgh

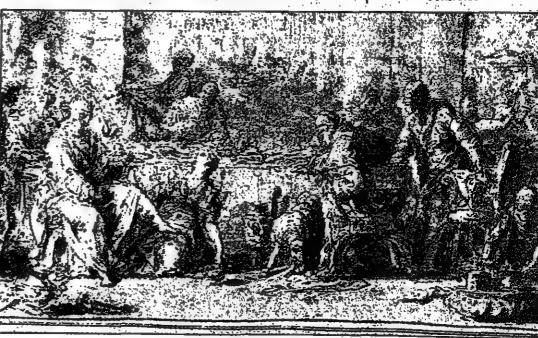

Towadays, prime quality touring exhibitions fre-quently bypass London and head for arts-conscious Edinburgh. A selection of about 60, mostly 18th-century, Venetian drawings is currently on show at the National Gallery of Scotland, following visits to Frankfurt, Dallas and Richmond, Virginia. But this show is. in fact, on its way back home to the Royal Library at Windsor, that most easily forgotten of our great national treasure house

Joseph Smith (1674-1770) was a wealthy English merchant banker who spent his life in Venice, stuffing his Grand Canal palazzo and Veneto villa with contem-porary Venetian art. After decades of obsequious effort, he became British Consul there. Despite Horace Walpole's account, it is likely that Smith was a convivial figure certainly sociable enough to befriend many of the artists he patronised: he became Canaletto's sole agent, raising his prices and packing him off for nine productive years in England. Thanks to Smith, many of the artist's pellucid views still grace English walls.

Had it not been for a decline in the consul's fortunes brought about by the Seven Years War and the Austrian Succession, Smith's su-preme collection might well have been forgotten. As an old man, however, he was obliged to sell and the Marquess of Bute made sure that the collection ended up on the walls of his friend George III's house, Buckingham Palace. There were, of course, many connoisseurs like Smith in the age of the Grand Tourist: men like Thomas Jenkins and James Byres who acted as middle men, guides and advisers to visiting English tlemen. But they were mostly based in Rome and concentrated on ring the newly-excavated ancient for others, as opposed to acquiring the modern for themselves. The consul was exceptional because he was collecting and commissioning the glorious Venetian manifestations of rococo for himself and this largely intact collection allows his taste to be bread and butter of the collections made by his Grand Touring compatriots. And he virtually ignored the great Venetian rococo artist, Tiepolo. What he liked was the pretty and the theatrical.

The highlight of this selection is, peedless to say, Canaletto. Smith commissioned six views of Venice's great piazza and its adjacent little sister. The amazing topographical verisimilitude of the Venetian scenes prove that at least until now, the city has been saved. Sadly, the same cannot be said of London. Smith never went south of Venice but Rome's classical ruins feature prominently in the numerous examples of that dodo of a senre, the capriccio, in a sparkling display of pen and wash technique, the Sicilian artist, Filippo Juvarra, invents a fanciful sarcophagus to another of the consul's favourite artists, Marco Ricci. Ricci himself can be seen as the designer of omate architectural stage sets and the sketcher of amusing caricatures (the Heath of his day), while his uncle, Sebastiano, comes across as the quintessential rococo decorator with an over-fussy technique; his

Magdalen Anointing Christ's Feet is one of a number of detailed modelli for larger paintings.

Smith also acquired several studies by the Renaissance master. Raphael, among them Christ's Charge to St Peter, a study for the tapestry cartoon now in the Victoria and Albert.

The one glaring absentee in an exhibition which depends exclusively on the taste of one man is any portrait of the "merchant of Venice" himself. Unfortunately, and incredibly in an age in which portraiture flourished, none exists.

CLASSICAL MUSIC: NEW STRING QUARTETS

lodern challenges to the fours of destiny

The string quartet has at once the longest and the shortest history in western instrumental music. Somewhere in the world there must have been a foursome cursing and delighting in Haydn at any hour of the last 200 years and more; somewhere else there will have been a composer, pen in hand, staring at four blank staves. But the essential quartet repertory remains that of a tiny period, from 1781, the year of Haydn's revolutionary Opus 33, to 1826, when Beethoven wrote his last quartets.

Those two composers defined what the quartet was, to the extent that even Mozart and Schubert. though writing during the hal-lowed years, seem like interlopers in this field, and anyone later has inevitably come on as a stranger. A few - like Mendelssohn, Schumann, Brahms - have managed to gam some place in the regular repertory: a few more - Verdi. Smetana, Dvořák – have done so with just one work. But what is most impressive is the stability of the quartet canon. So the quartet faces the contem-

contradiction of music in a particularly acute form: to be writing in a tradition which can only exist by rejecting accretions. A new quartet will be expected, not least by its composer, to attain standards of abstractness, weight and complexity established by the mid-1820s. but its chances of meeting those standards - and the only meaningful criterion is that of joining the repertory - are almost non-existent. All quartets are written against the certainty of Hence the arrival during this century of new-music specialist quartets, among which the Kronos and the Arditti are only the latest. If a composer can hardly hope to have a quartet become a staple of the Emersons of this world, then at least there is a chance of regular performances by the Arditti, for whom Ferneybough No 2 (1980) is an antiquity and the real tradition began yesterday. There is still, of course, the wider certainty of failure, but now the failure can be blamed on the conservatism of conventional quartet culture: the zest for the knotnest new music, have created their own criteria.

They were at the Almeida Festival this week, playing a programme that included the first performance of Vic Hoyland's Prano Quanter (with Y var Mikhas-hoff) and the London premiere of what Benedict Mason boldly calls his Quartet No 1. The Hoyland piece, introduced by a quiet, chiming motto on the piano, had a touch of Boulez in its beautful plucked and hammered sounds (a neat solution to the textural problems of the medium), in its slow, upward, searching melodies, and in its swerves between stateliness and hectic energy.

The Mason quarter is on a quite different scale. It plays continuously for 40 minutes, and steady concentration is not what it is about. There is one stretch based on a theme which ought to be a quotation if it is not - but even here the progress is in jerky flights of fancy. What keeps the flights airborne is their confidence and and his handling of effects and texture is expert much of his quarter, with its intricate detail, its rhythmic machinations, its yen for the upper register (sometimes with all four instruments stilt-walking high above the treble staff) and its tastes for mutings and harmonics, sounds as if inscribed on glass -or perhaps on glass in the process of melting, since this is music that enjoys being wonky and enjoys its status of failure (in the Haydn-Beethoven league). Its benignly freakish and whimsical character is what keeps it on the road, though there are little obsessions that hold sway from time to time: the sudden theme, the note A, the interval of a fifth.

Simon Holt's new quartet is different again. Here is a work not inclined to accept inevitable defeat against the challenge of the greats: it was appropriately introduced not by the Arditti but by the Mustry Quartet at the Leeds Festival, between Haydn and Schubert. Playing for 20 minutes, it is fine and strong in every bar, full of beautiful and striking ing, where pizzicato violins hold a tight rein on driving attacks from viola and cello - but remarkable above all for its cogent forward movement. There is the faint shadow of traditional form, with a slow middle section and a scherzo-finale in quick even rhythm, but this is very much in the background, and there is no obvious thematic development.

Quite how Holt achieves his sustained flow is, therefore, mysterious. Perhaps his subtitle contains a clue: "Danger of the Disappearance of Things" is a quotation from Giacometti which illustrate the way this music seems always to be moving towards points of statement or arrival that are never more than pretexts for further search. But that may be to misjudge the work's confidence of purpose. Certainly this is a considerable piece, and it had a considerable performance from the Mistry: firmly projected, suave and sure. There may still be a crack in the gates of the standard

"I'm not ashamed to say that I believe in God, because I can put it on wax," he says. "I have to live up to the respon-sibility of being a role model."

These examples of religion in rock music are not unusual. Yet if rock music and religion are ever linked in conversation, the only name sure to be mentioned (in Britain at least) will be that of Cliff Richard. Persistently overlooked is the vast body of rock which has, since its commercial birth in the American south of the early Fifties, been enriched by an admittedly turbulent relationship with religion.

For their part, religious groups have attacked rock music as being "base" (1950s), "communist inspired" (1960s) or "satanic" (1970s and 1980s), while rock groups have baited organised religion by professing sympathy for the devil. In the midst of the battle there have been conversions, not only to Christianity (Dion, Cliff Richard, Bob Dylan) but to Hinduism (George Harrison, Carlos Santana), Buddhism (Tina Turner), Islam (Richard Thompson, Cat Stevens) and unspecified mysticism (Van Morrison).

The earliest rock 'n' roll stars -Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis,

Chuck Berry, Little Richard and Buddy Holly - grew up in fundamentalist churches, and each took something of the non-conformist religious style into their music. Presley credited the fiery preachers of the sawdust circuit with inspiring his hip-swivelling stage act, and throughout his career he used white gospel singers

in his backing groups. Little Richard based his gobbledegook shrieking on the "speaking in tongues" which he heard in the Holiness churches of Georgia. Chuck Berry, in his 1987 autobiography, suggested that the origin of his own "rocking beat" lay in the Baptist hymns which he heard his parents singing at

The founders of soul music plundered the language and style of gospel music for secular gain, When Ray Charles began recording what he called his "spiritual and blues combination", he was attacked for taking holy music into bars and dance halls. "I know that's wrong," said blues singer Big Bill Broonzy, himself a week-end preacher. "He should be singing in church,"

Presley, Lewis and Little Richard all recorded gospel albums (Presley's 1965 hit "Crying in the chapel" was taken from one such recording) but they would have considered it blasphemous to have spliced religious sentiment onto a rock beat. Can you picture Jesus Christ singin' rock n' roll?" an incredulous Jerry Lee Lewis once asked me. "Everythin' he preached was against it."

It was not until the mid-Sixties that religion became acceptable subject matter in rock music, but by then the religion that was acceptable was not Christianity. Helped by frequent doses of LSD, bypassing the traditionally accepted mediators between God and man.

After one particularly intense trip, the Beach Boy, Brian Wilson, announced": "I saw God and it just blew my mind." Paul McCartney confessed to the Daily Mirror that he had taken hallucinogenics and that they had provided him with a religious experience. "God is a force we are all part of," said the one-time agnostic, advising clergymen to join him on the voyage of

The Beatles began setting ancient religious texts to music - an extract from the Tibetan Book of the Dead for "Tomorrow never knows", a translation from the Tao I Ching for "The inner light". Timothy Leary later described the Beatles as "four evangelists" and rock 'n' roll musicians in general as "the philosopher-poets of the new religion". There was, actually, no single "new religion", but rock music did become an important transmitter of religious ideas.

ew young people would have heard of the occultist Aleister Crowley, who died in 1947, if he had not been mentioned in interviews by Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page. Meher Baba would have remained an obscure mystic if he had not been championed by Pete Townshend as the inspiration behind The Who's concept album, Tommy. And how far would the Rastafarian religion have spread without the music of Bob Marley and Burning Spear?

The Hare Krishna movement which had come to the West in 1965 was catapulted into the public consciousness when George Harrison produced a version of the mantra, which became a Top 20 hit in 1969. Likewise is now more widespread than ever. received its biggest boost when all four Beatles followed the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi to India.

Cliff Richard, musical evangelist of long standing; and Sinead O'Connor, whose current album includes a prayer for serenity

That religious ideas and symbols remain a powerful currency within rock is not hard to prove. This is obviously true on a superficial level - such as George Michael's use of religious symbols to promote his Faith album - but also in the more serious investigations by musicians such as Peter Gabriel Brian Eno and David Byrne who have each developed an interest in the role of music in ecstatic religion.

U2, one of the most influential rock bands of the 1980s, is unashamedly Christian in its commitment. Its best known single, "I still haven't found what I'm looking for", is full of biblical images and quotes, even though the song ends on a restless note.

Harder to determine is whether the interest in religion expressed by these stars continues to reflect the appetite of the audience, as it certainly did in the Sixties, or whether it remains the affectation of those who are rich enough to realise that money does not satisfy

Even though one may retain a certain incredulity about some of the beliefs (such as Terence Trent D'Arby's assertion that the late Marvin Gaye is dictating songs to evidence of stars adopting religious positions to advance their careers. Often the reverse: when a figure such as Bob Dylan announces that he has undergone a 'born-again experience", record companies worry that too much overt material will harm sales. Music and religion have enjoyed a long and close relationship perhaps because, of all the arts, music can best suggest the ineffable. "The separation between music and religion is comparatively recent and more or less distinctively Western," notes the writer William Burroughs, "In Morocco the two are synonymous and all musicians are also

Pete Townshend suggests that the persistence of religion in rock comes because "a mystery takes place. Why does a certain chord give me a buzz? Why does that combination of notes have that effect? As soon as you ask the question, you're on a path."

Yet the rock press in Britain continues to snigger behind the back of its hand when the subject of religion is broached. Politics, sex and drugs it can handle, but no serious analysis of the relationship between rock music and religion is ever offered. Perhaps Van Morrison was right in his observation that "music is spiritual. The music

ALBUMS

Peachy but precise serenading from the New First Lady of Soul

Arrita Baker: Compositions (Elektra 7559-60922-1)

APPOINTED by general consensus to the post of New First Lady of Soul, Anita Baker clearly has less in common with the bump and grind of Aretha Franklin or Otis Redding in their "Respected" primes than she does with the smooth, jazzy melismata and outstanding technique of singers like her hero Sarah Vaughan and the young Ella Fitzgerald.

Her fourth album, Com-positions, is finely crafted, but makes few advances beyond the 1988 offering, Giving You The Best That I Got.

Produced again by Michael J. Powell, this is the kind of creamy after-hours serenading which in less-capable hands tends to take on an oral consistency similar to that of mushy peas. That face is avoided by both the acuity of the musicianship and the breathtaking range of Baker's delivery. On a song called "Lonely", she sings of her current unhappiness in a smouldering, heavy-lidded drawl which suddenly ascends into a startling series of soprano elisions. As well as such taut few tracks where the band, featuring bassist Nathan East and pianist Greg Phillinganes (a bravura performance throughout the album), is liberated from the razor-creased click-track guided rhythms that predominate.

Otherwise the material, the performances and the album's peachy sound are marred only by this peculiarly modern reluctance to let the rhythm section swing.

Adrian Belew: Young Lions (Atlantic 7567-82089-1)

Adrian Belew is one of those fiercely technical guitarist types territory already staked out on her precision, this is also one of the who has ended up producing his best work with artists like Frank Zappa and King Crimson, but who would like his music to sound nice and simple. Predictably enough, in attempting to straddle these polarities, his album falls uncomfortably between two.

The pop stuff is pretty awful. "Looking for a UFO" sounds like a pastiche of Phil Collins doing a pastiche of an old Motown song, while "Men in Helicopters" takes its own ecological message to heart by recycling several old Beatles riffs. A new version of "Heartbeat" from the King Crimson album does little beyond suggesting a paucity of imagination.

Better by far is Belew in his old sonic assassin role, charging against the grain of "Gunman", or limbering up with those familiar squealing train-whistle noises behind some weird American radio preacher rap on "I am what I am".

logy Pop: Brick by Brick (Virgin America VUSLP 19)

Iggy Pop's desire to become capable of "dealing with his work in a condition of sobriety" is leading him up some strange alleys. Frankly, it comes as something of a shock for those familiar with either his hyper-thyroid yell or his bombed-out baritone drawl get on to many playlists thanks to Pierson of the B52s on "Candy".

to come across recorded evidence of him actually trying to sing.

One of several unconvincing attempts here is on "Main Street eyes", where the new Pop betrays an embarrassing deficiency in the pitching department, while condemning the false burlesque which he believes good old rock 'n' roll has become.

In contrast, the title track, "Brick by brick", is a plea for balance, sanity and dignity away from the rock 'n' roll rat race. Primarily acoustic, it is one of several selections that despite a radio-friendly ambience, will not

Pop's rather inclegant use of strongly "idiomatic" language. Still, at least he is trying to extend his range and shake himself out of the old anarcho-punk routine that had become such a creative burden for him. He does a neat job on a John Hiatt song, "Something wild"; wanders with wry insouciance through a neo-Stones' chug, "Neon forest", and gets completely out of his depth on a bizarre lollop, "Starry night". Produced by Don Was, the collection also features guest appearances by Slash, of Guns N' Roses, and a vocal duet with Kate the can forget the grainy, archive film which The Old Grey Whistle Test dug up to accompany its first, and frequently repeated TV presentations of Tubular Bells? That black and white footage of dozens of little skiing figures, tumbling about in the snow, became a mnemonic for the sound of trebly guitars overdubbed into grandiose orchestral layers and iced with the tinkling chatter of bell chimes.

Released in 1973, Tubular Gells was the first album on Richard Branson's Virgin Records label. Its remarkable worldwide success - five years in the UK chart and eventual sales of more than 10 million copies – virtually bankrolled the company during its early years. The prototype coffee table rock album, Tubular Bells was a harbinger of the soft New Age style which became a popular strand of music among the CD-owning generation of the Eignties. Oldfield, only 20 at the time, never repeated the triumph, although Hergest Ridge rode to No 1 in 1974 on the back of its predecessor's continuing deering style conjured a string of wondrous hits in the early Sixties. The unconventional structure of songs like "Only the lonely", "Cryin' " and "It's over" enabled him to create tremendous surges of pitched dramatic emotion. His producer, Fred Foster one of pop's great unsung heroes used every trick in the book, from full orchestral arrangements to com-plicated patchworks of backing vocalese, to forge the swelling tide of sound on which Orbison's dolorous, keening voice was borne. Never much of an albums artist, the best compilation of his singles currently available is The Legendary Roy Orbison, released in October 1988, two months before his death. Rehabilitated in his twilight years, thanks to the use of "In dreams" in the movie Blue Velvet (1986) and as a member of the old lags' supergroup, the Traveling Wilburys. Orbison is better remembered for the dignified pathos he offered as an indispensable American counterpoint to the general brutishness of the English beat boom.

Craggy survivors' magic

ROCK

The Rolling Stones Wembley Stadium

ON AN audience gripped by World Cup fever the Rolling Stones worked their ramshackle magic. A huge cheer went up in the 72,000-capacity stadium, buffeting the pensive mood of "Almost hear you sigh" as England scored - don't ask me how everyone knew it had happened - and then a gathering pall of gloom descended, fittingly enough during "Paint it black", as it became apparent that England must have gone down on penalties.

"Is the tension getting to you?" asked Jagger at one point. If it was getting to the group they certainly were not showing it. The world's most durable rock 'n' roll band, back for their first official show on English soil since 1982, were on supremely confident and relaxed form. Beginning the show in broad daylight, the five skinny figures were ranged across the stage under a vast panoply of Dayglo panels carelessly splattered with huge patterns of swirls and zigzags. Charlie Watts looked grey and determined behind his minimalist kit; Bill Wyman, miles off to the side, seemed bored stiff cradling his bass; Ronnie Wood relaxed with a fag in his plectrum hand; while his rumpled partner, Keith Richards, applied himself with cheerful, boss-eyed concentration to the business of engineering the glorious grimy riffs so central to the group's vast repertoire. At the front, Jagger strutted, preened, shimmled and sang with a fervour that the years have done nothing to diminish. He went through half a dozen jackets at least, frequently exposing his nonexistent midriff but keeping his frousers on.

Jagger at Wembley on Wednesday: fervour that the years have done nothing to diminish their golden oldies.

It is the combination of Jagger's igility of body and mind and Richards' immersion in the gloomy rough and tumble of rockmusician folklore that has kept the band buoyant where others have sunk, and now these craggy survivors have an unsurpassed legacy of material on which to draw. From the Sixties there was "You can't always get what you want", "Little red rooster" and "Ruby Tuesday"; from the Seventies "Tumbling dice", "It's only rock'n'roll", "Miss you" and "Brown sugar"; and from the Eighties "Start me up", "Harlem shuffle", "Rock and a hard place" Jagger whole in a piece of ludicrous knockabout theatrics. CONCERT

Frank Sinatra London Arena

VOGUE once said of Frank Sinatra that "the voice is leading cool moderns back to emotion" but looking around at the wellheeled sentimentalists and legendseekers at the London Arena, it was hard to spot any moderns at all. We could as easily have been about to witness a heavyweight boxing contest as a performance by the greatest popular singer of the 20th century.

Why do we come to see Frank Sinatra? Because there is some twisted pleasure in hearing the burnt-out shell of vocal genius? Because for odd moments we hear the ghost of his greatness? Or just because he is Frank Sinatra?

Fortunately the experience is not a grotesque one. If his hipster movements are a little stiff, there is still enough rhythm and resonance in his singing to keep us hanging on his sometimes uncertain words. The swing classics are clearly easier for him than the ballads, but one applauds the bravery of "My heart stood still", a Rodgers and Hart song he introduces with the concern of a music historian. "This," he says. "is one of the finest pieces of music ever written ... "

He makes little attempt to disguise his scorn for the trite pop of songs such as "Strangers in the night", telling the audience: "I didn't like this song when I first heard it. Now I positively hate it." For the most part, Sinatra fighting man", one swallowing

romps through all the obvious numbers, kicking off with "Come fly with me" and continuing with the inevitable irony of "You make me feel so young", "The lady is a tramp" and "For once in my life". On "A foggy day in London Town" and "Mack the Knife" he really hits his stride, though the best singing of the night comes with the patriarchal braggadocio of the Rodgers/Hammerstein "My boy Bill". "No sissies in my family, no sir," he japes, looking suddenly like an ageing brigadiergeneral. From the scrawny, callow Sinatra of the Forties to the paunchy elder statesman of Vegas glitz is a long way to come in one he would simply metamorphose back into the voice of his Capitol years and give us perfect ren-ditions of "What's new?" or "One for my baby".

The saloon song ritual that precedes "Angel eyes", complete with cigarette and barstool, has become worn and tired, and the head voice falters painfully. If the Sinatra of the Forties was a violin, and the Sinatra of the Fifties was a viola, the voice of 1990 is a rather battered cello. Is Sinatra, in the final analysis, a fat cat or a tormented artist in a tuxedo, raging at what he can no longer do? And when he does 'face that final curtain", as he's been threatening to do for a mighty long time, will this music disappear too?

Glenda Jackson: Mother Courage

THEATRE Mother Courage Mermaid

WHATEVER the quibbles about the production Philip Prowse has brought from Glasgow, there is still no resisting the performance at its epicentre. Surely there never can have been as pugnacious a saleswoman as Glenda Jackson's Mother Courage. If she can bring half that raucous energy to a career in parliament, heaven knows what political bric-a-brac the country may end up buying.

Shirts, booze and food, however, are her staple wares here. Brecht's Mother Courage follows the wars, trading with whatever army is nearest and losing all three of her children in the process. Always she puts immediate profit above long-term sense, not seeing that, as someone tells her, "you need a long spoon to sup with the devil". She is canny, streetwise, and foolish, terminally foolish. Some actresses have flouted Brecht's wishes by sentimentalising Courage. Jackson misses neither the character's reckless shortsightedness, nor her wolfishness, nor her self-inflicted pain. She begins with a cocksure swagger, and ends bowed and blankfaced, robotically steering her cart round her daughter's corpse.

In between, that quintessential career. One wishes of course, that

Jackson sound, a rasping blend of snarl and caw, is much in evidence. Less happily, so is a sort of ironic crooning, which momentarily lifts the vowels two or three octaves. That can sound operatic, sometimes even camp, as if Frankie Howerd were incongruously adding an "oooh" to the ravening creatures assembled in Glenda Jackson's voicebox. She should reconsider this, as she should her face and hands, which look as if they have been braving the musty innards of a Glasgow theatre, not tempests.

Yet hers is a formidable performance. It is dangerous to compete with Helen Weigel, by general reckoning the greatest Courage. Jackson does so in the famous scene when she must happle for her younger son's life; then pretend not to recognise his body. She forces her head slowly to shake in calculated uninterest, and then, when danger has passed, her mouth gapes in that stricken O which Weigel reportedly observed on an Indian woman whose child had died of starvation. This is not copycat acting, but a moment Jackson makes her own.

There is solid support from Laurance Rudic, Tristram Jellinek and others; but Prowse's production can still seem fussy. The presence of war is, after all, clearly enough signalled in dumb-show at the start: sheaves of corn, serene peasants, an almighty bang, marauding soldiers, slaughter. We do not need exemplary figures endlessly parading behind the 11.20 Film: Sleeper (1973).

• in the Woody Allen canon Sleeper forms a bridge between the early films which were little more than a string of a gags and the later comedies of character, if it is still somewhell less than the sum of its parts, Allen is moving towards the united structure of his more recent work. In style the film

Woody Allen goes into the future (11.20pm)

reveals Alten's debt to the silent cinema, with its achoes of the routines of Chaplin and Keaton, while drawing on his own experience as a stand-up comedian. Verbal or visual. the gags come thick and fast, including the delicious one-liner about Norman Mailer donating his ego to science. The Allen character is a jazz musician and owner of a health food store who is deep frozen during an operation and wakes up 200 years into the future. This is the cue for adventures in an Orwellian dictatorship to which Allen's ittle-man haro leads the maistance in company with a dotty poet engagingly played by Diane Keaton, (Caefax) arn Weather 12.45mm Neguib Metrioux: paradoxical career (9.30pm) 9.30 Homelands.

■ The Egyptian novelist Neguib Mahfouz, winner of the 1988 Nobel Prize for literature, is profiled against the background of his country's development as a client state under the Ottomen and British empires and aubsequent independença. Like most of the other writers in the series Mahfora has used his books to criticise his society. Unlike them he has menaged to stay out of trouble. His career has been founded on paradoxes. He is a product of the middle class who became a champion of the poor, a water inspired by the language of the Koran who has angered purists by using modern colloquial Arabic and a supporter of the Egyptian nationalism with a fondness for Rider Haggard. The backbone of Patrick Matthews's film is an interview with Mahtouz, who may be old, deaf and losing his sight but is still a tucid and good-humoured guide to his life and times. Mediterranean starts by looking at ancient industries and traditional crafts in a way that recalls the Look at Life cinema magazine that used to see Spaniards cultivating salt on a remote seashore, just as the Romans did 2,000 years before them. Sea snats are still caught off Greece by the traditional method of suspending baskets in the sea baited with rotting tah. Sardinian divers search the sea bed for coral, plunging to fearful depths with the most primitive breathing apparatus. In Venice a glass factory has been in the same family since 1450. Narrated by Andrew Sachs, who is fast becoming television's best-known voice over, the film abandons its blendness near the end when it comes abruptly into the late 20th century and reminds us that the Mediterranean is being overrun by tourists and suffers a quarter of the world's oil pollution 8.55 International Athletics. West African states may send troops into Liberia

By MICHAEL KNIPE, DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

according to informed sources

With rebel forces surrounding Monrovia, the Liberian capital, and Samuel Doe under pressure to relinquish the presidency, the six states have prepared a plan to send in military contingents from Sierra Leone and Guinea, assisted by a smaller contingent from Nigeria.

Their mission will be to prevent further bloodshed and to restore basic security, the

The decision has been reached at informal discussions in a number of standing committee of the 16- seven months ago. nation Economic Community Of West Africa (Ecowas) and is expected to be announced formally today in Freetown, the Sierre Leone capital.

Their purpose, the sources in the Liberian civil war, say, is to assist in the installation of an interim government in Monrovia. They hope to obtain oposition participation and to facilitate elections within six months.

> The effect of the intervention would be to prevent Charles Taylor, the leader of the rebels, from seizing power. He may be invited to join the interim government; though to welcome the Ecowas initiative, he may have no option but to accept.

> The sources claim that the United States has privately indicated its support for the initiative, which has been undertaken because none of the member states likes the idea of a fellow West African government coming to power as a result of civil war.

More than 5,000 people have died since Mr Taylor, a former civil servant, launched capitals under the aegis of the his bid to oust President Doe

An Ecowas statement issued esterday, said that both the Liberian Government and rebels of the National Patri-otic Front (NPFL) had shown an interest in the initiative. The statement said that the decision to hold the talks resulted from a diplomatic shuttle between Guinea, Liberia, Ivory Coast, Togo and Gambia using an official Nigerian aircraft.

An NPFL representative told journalists at the Liberia-Ivory Coast border earlier yesterday that the rebels were ready to take part in the Ecowas initiative but would not back down on their de-mand that Mr Doe, who seized power in a bloody military coup in April 1980, offer to resign.

Mr Doe was believed yesterday to be prepared to leave Monrovia if the US would send a helicopter.

His own $20m Boeing 707 executive jet, bought in December, is at Stansted airport. It was impounded at the request of creditors last month after having brought Mrs Nancy Doe, the president's wife, and their children to Nigeria, Gambia, Mali, Togo, executive secretary, is said to their home in London.

everything that the new independent miners' unions in the USSR stand for".

He said three million miners gave at least a day's pay to the NUM in 1984, with clothes and gifts: "We were told that this support reached the British miners. The fate of this money and goods is now in dispute. Our experience has shown that communist officials (in the USSR) are corrupt, and money raised from ordinary workers in the past has been used to support the international communist

Mr Butchenko, who returns to the Soviet Union tomorrow, said he would seek to expose the role of the official Soviet unions in "this dirty affair". He said the amount collected by the Siberian miners could have amounted to 10 million roubles; officially equivalent to £10 million but rate reality, to £3.6 million.

In the Lightman report, which shocked members of the NUM executive by its revelations of unlawful misapplications of funds, Mr Scargill and Mr Heathfield are criticised severely for having obtained loans from the IMO and for having allowed them to be paid out of a "sham"

The IMO provided Mr Scargill with a bridging loan of £100,000 after the strike in 1985 and met £81,000 in legal ices when he claimed he had been falsely imprisoned by the South Yorkshire police. Mr Heathfield, an IMO committee member, also borrowed £60,000 for a house nurchase in 1989, a fact which 'disturbed" Mr Lightman.

Mr Lightman says he finds occupied in the middle of the strike when union members were receiving no pay. The report says that Mr

Heathfield secured the expenditure of £13,511 on the ground that urgent repairs, were needed, but the works were so misdescribed that the NUM may have paid for them It appears that more than £!

million now with the IMO could have come from sources connected with the NUM and that confusion of the funds led to a "breach of duty" to the donors and the NUM.

Roy Lynk, leader of the Union of Democratic Mineworkers, which was formed after Mr Scargill had refused to allow NUM members a ballot on the strike, said that the money should be recov-"regretfully" that Mr Heath-field misled the union about miners "because their stanthe character of work to be dard of living is so appalling"

And - as chance would have it - Sir Cranley Onslow, the chairman of the Tory backbenchers' 1922 committee, was in his place yesterday afternoon, for Treasury questions. He was. The Treasury front bench are knocking their Labour opposition for six, at present. Treasury ministers are giving very short answers — and, often, real answers — to questions, and spiking them with barbed questions about Labour's own policies. entirely bereft of intellectual content, in which the opposition end up on the defensive.

But John Smith, Labour's shadow chancellor, remains a heavyweight. He came close to scoring, once, yesterday. -It had all started with a question from Mrs Gwyneth Dunwoody (Lab. Crewe & Nantwich). This woman packs quite a punch, and is rumoured to be the MP (whom Sir Geoffrey Howe refuses to name, in answer to questions) who is still requiring the House of Commons snuff box to be kept in place and stocked. Still, we were surprised to see the Liberal leader, entering the Chamber, virtually throw himself to the floor in mid-stride as Mrs Dunwoody rose. Was Mr Ashdown's SAS between Mrs Dunwoody (on her feet) and Mr Speaker addressing). This is a breach of Commons etiquette.

B&C's chairman joins exodus

● SPORT 35-40

Sir Peter's resignation follows the departure of a dozen key staff from the B&C head office last week, a month after the appointment of Ernst & Young as administrative

Three executive directors remain, John Gunn, Maria Callaghan and Iain Burns. However, Sir Peter's resignation is expected to be followed shortly by that of the other two non-executive directors, Sir Peter Miles and David Barnes.

"Sir Peter felt that his role as chairman was no longer appropriate, given that B&C was in administration, and that he should sever his links with B&C," said a spokesman for the administrators. Sir Peter was unavailable for comment. Comment, page 23

In South African currency, sales totalled R6.46 billion (£1.37 billion), against R5.92 billion in the previous January-June period and R4.75 billion in July to December.

FRIDAY JULY 6 1990 Major rules out early cut in interest rates

ECONOMICS CORRESPONDENT

THE chancellor yesterday signalled that interest rates would stay high as long as credit continues to grow too fast, despite the strengthening of the pound.

Market expectations of early sterling entry into the exchange-rate mechanism of the European Monetary System, meanwhile, held the pound at its highest level for 11 months. It closed at 92.7 on its Bank of England trade-weighted index, unchanged from Wednesday, despite some profittaking late in the European trading day. It closed in London nearly a quarter cent lower at $1.7825 and almost a half pfennig firmer at DM2.9438. In what was seen as an attempt to dispel any market expectations of an early cut in the base rate from the 15 per cent level it has stood at since October, John Major told the Commons that the volume of credit being advanced at the moment was "still higher than I would wish to see." This, he added, naturally meant the government would have to keep interest rates at a higher level than otherwise would have been the case.

His remarks at Ouestion Time followed official figures on Monday, which indicated that prolonged exposure to high interest rates was failing to curb borrowing and spending in the way the government wanted. New credit advanced to consumers in May was £3.9 billion. This was the highest monthly increase for two years and far exceeded City forecasts. Volume retail sales data for the same month were also revised upwards to show a 1.4 per cent

Mr Major voiced his dissatisfaction with the credit situation in reply to a Conservative MP's question about credit market-ing, an area in which he has been urging the lending institutions to show greater disci-pline. He said there were "encouraging signs" that the institutions were taking the matter very seriously.

But he sought to underline that the banks and building societies were not the worst offenders, pointing to small-time, suggesting the FT-SE index may be property-based lending schemes as the entering a trading range of 2,250-2,300. main focus of government concern.

Mr Major's comments on credit confirmed the money market's view that Britain's economic fundamentals are not favourable enough for a base rate cut yet, whether or not the pound joined the ERM. The benchmark three-month interbank rate closed 1/16 point higher at 1511/18-15/16 per cent.

The stock markets were thoroughly demoralised yesterday by the chancellor's statement, which followed a spate of profit downgradings and worries over currency losses caused by sterling's continued

At the same time, Wall Street began to slide. By the close, the FT-SE 100 index of shares was down 24.1 points at 2,331.4 although trading volume was light, with only 386.8 million shares traded. Brokers are becoming increasingly cautious about the outlook for equities over the summer, County NatWest, for example,

Gilts also fared badly, drawing little comfort from sterling's sparkling performance, focusing instead on the threat of high interest rates for some time to come. Losses among government stocks stretched to more than a point.

Leading companies that earn most of their profits overseas were again among the bardest hit again, but consumer issues such as stores, buildings and breweries suffered heavy falls later, upset by the chancellor's comments on interest rates. Only banks managed to buck the trend as several brokers became more positive on the sector before the interim reporting season

Neil MacKinnon, chief economist at Yamaichi Securities, said Mr Major's concern reflected the fact that nine months of 15 per cent base rates had failed to dent bank lending, which was still growing at an annual rate of 19 per cent, despite a weak economy. He said lending growth in Bri-plosion", raising doubts about the British authorities' ability to curb it, as long as the government rejected credit controls. Mr Major is today expected to expand on his "hard ecu" proposals for an alternative route to European monetary union. He will be addressing the Welsh regional organisation of the Confederation of British Industry. A speech to the Conservative party in Wales could also provide fresh details on the alternative proposal in the wake of Mr Major's discussions this week with Karl Otto Pohl. the Bundesbank president.

 The subdued state of the housing market was evident in housing figures issued by the environment department. These showed that work on a provisional 13,600 dwellings was started in May, against 17,000 a year earlier. The seasonally-adjusted data put completions also lower at 13,500 against 15,800 in May last year.

Berisford puts all its assets up for sale

By Angela Mackay

ional put its assets up for sale yesterday after all divisions, except British Sugar, reported an interim loss.

The company made a pre-tax profit of £21.4 million but after exceptional items of £160.6 million, mostly related to its New York property portfolio, Berisford attributed a loss of £144.5 million to shareholders and decided not to pay an interim dividend.

Berisford shares fell sharply to 77p before closing at 81p after finishing at 91p on Wednesday. This compared with a high this year of 151p.

Berisford's new board, led by John Sciater, the chairman, said, "several parties" are still negotiating with the company asset in the Bristar food division, after Tate & Lyle on Tuesday ruled out a bid.

Garry Weston, chairman of Associated British Foods that owns 24 per cent of Berisford. is known to be interested in making an offer and is expected to make a statement about his intentions in a few days.

BERISFORD Internat- ies, who still owns 6 per cent portfolios made a loss of £10.9 of the company, Berisford's million after an exceptional provision of £12.3 million.

An exceptional loss of £146.6 million was apportioned to the company's New York property portfolio, which is to be sold under the aegis of Stephen Mann, an American lawyer. He said he has sold one building and has offers on the rest. Almost £200 million has been written off on the investment, valued in the balance sheet at $785 million.

The slump in the New York property market is seen as the main cause of Berisford's predicament after the company was forced to take over liabilities and management of the portfolio when its partner, Joe Neumann, failed to pay his debts last year. An independent property valuation put a gross value of $844 million on the portfolio. Mr Mann said this is a realistic price, but if not achieved, there will be an additional contingent liability of $53.5

Berisford's financial services division recorded a loss after interest of £4.5 million compared with a profit of £6.4 million previously, while the commodities division made a loss of £6.7 million. In addition, the British and West Coast of America property

Peter Jacobs, the group chief executive, said the company's loss-making jewellery business was sold last week and a partial management buy-out for the British property division led by Cyril Dennis is still under negotia-tion. A majority of Berisford's stake in Rayner, its coffee business, also looks like being sold to management while most of the West Coast property is under offer or sold.

Swelling interest charges on net debt of £1 billion have led the company to renegotiate its borrowings with a syndicate of banks led by NatWest, About 65 per cent of the company's debt is unsecured.

ish industrial users of sugar urged the European Community to abolish national sugar quotas, saying they forced sugar producers to be anticompetitive. The group will seek explanations from Tate & Lyle and British Sugar about possible compensation for users and consumers who may have been overchanged after a statement by Tate & Lyle that certain marketing practices of Health drink: William Courtney toasts Southern Water with his favourite product

By COLIN CAMPBELL SOUTHERN Water, the last of the ten water groups to report results for the year ended March, beat its prospectus profits forecast with proforma profit of £84.1 million (£81 million) and is paying, as expected, a final dividend of 10.02p a share.

Southern's dividend dec-laration brings to £103.23 the net dividend payment due to investors who took up the 10 water issues as a "package".

Southern's statutory profits announcement shows pre-tax profits of £60.1 million against a restated £65.1 million preprivatisation. Turnover in the was £225.8 million against £204.1 million.

William Courtney, Southern's chairman, says it was a very satisfactory financial performance and the current year is "off to a good start". Southern Water shares eased 4p to 141p.

The group spent £126 million in the year ended March on capital works, and plans a £150 million spend this year. The cost of amendments and probable re-designs to meet draft EC wastewater directives for coastal discharges could be less than £100 million.

the Bush administration is considering a tax on share dealings as part of a plan to reduce the American budget

The Securities Industry Association, the largest lobbying group for financial firms in America, has written to James Brady, the Treasury Secretary, urging him to oppose such a levy on the grounds that it would harm economic growth and lead to a decline in trade on the country's leading exchanges.

From Wolfgang Münchau in Berlin

THE senate of West Berlin has decided to turn a 45-acre area of Potsdamer Platz into a development property and Daimler-Benz has made a DM93 million bid for the land.

Daimler plans to build a futuristic services centre employing 6,000 people. While most German cities would have been proud to attract the country's largest company, Berliners were in uproar at what they called a "planning obscenity" and the thought that even symbols of the past had to catch up with modern economic reality.

The site looks like a giant circus the day after the show, a piece of derelict no man's land for 29 years surrounded by the Berlin Wall and left to rot. In the days before the wall, Potsdamer Platz was one of Berlin's liveliest squares.

Daimler's decision formed part of a back-to-Berlin mood prevalent through-Walter Momper, the governing mayor,

Berlin will become "perhaps Europe's largest centre for the service industries". If Berlin becomes the capital, even the Bundesbank might have to move, a thought not relished by its president. As Germany's biggest company, Daimler hopes to be in a position to make other companies follow. Daimler is not changing its headquarters but will create a new division, financial services, as a fourth leg, in addition to its motor, defence and electronics businesses. Berlin's circumstances and its politics, however, could make Daimler-Benz's ambition difficult to achieve.

Berlin's opportunity is to attract business in an area where Germany is weak - services. The city's notorious lack of property would make additional manufacturing capacity difficult to achieve. The hope for an economic miracle in Berlin was at the centre of the decision by green coalition government almost collapsed over the issue. "I would like to warn everyone not to fall into the illusion that Berlin will automatically become the capital, or will attract the Olympic Games, new investors and residents. Berlin needs to make offers." The Alternative List, his junior coalition partners, threatened to pull out if the deal went ahead but did not. But the issue of new investment projects will ramble on. Dr Michaele Schreyer, the Green West Berlin environment senator, pledged that "such great planning mistakes must not be repeated." Daimler has made concessions over

Potsdamer Platz. Daimler said it now wants to build "not a cold administrative building, but a lively development with restaurants and cultural facilities." Not the same as the old Postdamer Platz, but then again, that disappeared 29 years

By Colin Narbrough NICHOLAS Ridley, the trade secretary, has criticised the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development for a warning it gave last week over possible asset-stripping by predatory Western investors in Eastern Europe.

Mr Ridley, who starts a week-long visit to Czecho-slovakia and Hungary on Monday, said he considered the term asset-stripping derogatory. Instead, he suggested it would be better to talk of 'courageous investment' where investors sought a better return, given the uncertainties there have been in Eastern Europe. But he said he felt the region was now a "good bet".

Mr Ridley will be accompanied by representatives of British firms interested in investment in the former command economies.He will be underlining the government's support for their wish for closer ties with the West and the European Community.

He said it was "politically very important" that no new divide emerge in Europe. The more investment in the region now, the better for all sides.

Mr Ridley stressed the need for investment in Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Poland, the focus markets for British firms. He hopes to sign tion agreement in Prague.

While lending to Europe, the Middle East and North Africa rose from $3.77 billion to $4.41 billion, commitments in Asia fell from $7.83 billion to $6.4 billion with the figures for Africa and Latin America little changed. Moeen Qureshi, senior vice accounted for by adjustment

Confident Tiphook driving ahead

Profits surge: Tiphook's Robert Montague is excited at the company's prospects

STRONG organic growth boosted profits before tax at Tiphook, Robert Montague's transport and freight group, from £18.1 million to £33.1 million in the 12 months to end-April.

The last month of the year was marked by the ac-quisition, after a long battle, of some of Sea Containers' as-sets, but these contributed less than £1 million to the figures.A final dividend of .5p makes a total of 9.2p, against 7p last time.

Analysts have expressed concern about Tiphook's debts in the past. But Mr Montague, the chairman, said gearing was now down to about 280 per cent after the May purchase of Trailerent, against a one-time high of 400 per cent

His group had the ability to fund capital spending this year of as much as £200 million, which would mean Tiphook could add about 12 per cent to the capacity of its trailer and container rental fleets through organic growth alone."We're very confident and excited about Tiphook's position over the next decade," he said.

Tiphook plans the disposal of some peripheral businesses over the next few weeks, including a couple bought from Sea Containers, but these are likely to raise less than £15 million.

The shares shot ahead 21p to 557p as the market took in the figures.

"To be honest, I haven't always worked at home. Until about a year ago, I was what might be described as 'something in the City.'

You know, same old train into town in the morning. Same old battle for a seat. Same old faces in the office.

Then one day, after a particularly tiresome meeting with my so-called superiors and a three hour journey home, (how do leaves on the track stop a thirty-ton locomotive?) I took the plunge and decided to go it alone.

Business wasn't a problem. I had a couple of clients who would follow me anywhere.

It was the premises that proved a stumbling block.

Then, by chance, I met a chap in my local who worked from home.

Like me, he'd talked to his clients almost every day.

But he'd realised he only actually met them face-to-face once or twice a month. The rest of the time it was by phone or fax.

So it was, that one morning after the British Telecom brochure A Guide to Working from Home had dropped onto my doormat, I found myself talking to a lady from their sales division.

Why did I go to them?

For starters, they knew exactly what they were talking about and could offer sensible advice.

Their equipment was readily available, either from the British Telecom Shop or the better office equipment or electrical retailers.

But more importantly, my new business would rely on a communications system that worked at all times.

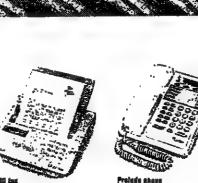

If there were problems, I wanted the people who could solve them to be in the next town, not Timbuktu.

Anyway, the first thing she recommended I invest in was a telephone.

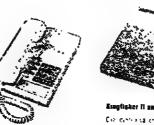

Brushing aside my protestations that I already had one, she showed me the Prelude. It could apparently memorise forty of my

Gas find confirmed by Hamilton Oil

HAMILTON Oil yesterday confirmed a "significant" discovery of natural gas in the Irish Sea close to the large Morecambe field owned by British Gas. The American exploration and production company, whose shares are listed in London, said that tests carried out on Block 110/13 recorded a cumulative flow of 70 million cubic feet a day at stabilised rates. Appraisal drilling is expected to take place later this year but energy analysts believe that commercial development is certain to take place, with the first gas flowing no control; as if the government is merely a distressed bystander; as if it is not much to do with him. He blames the lending institutions for doing no more than they are required by their shareholders: lending money and making profits.

There is no doubt credit is continuing to roll up at a much faster rate than is desirable, and the figures for May released earlier this week showed the highest level of advances for three months. Where they should have been falling, they were still rising. The response from the government, consistent even if ineffective, is to make a lot of noise and keep interest rates high. Nobody seems to mention money supply any more.

There are two threads to the rise in credit, one economic and the other social, and it is far from certain which one Mr Major is hoping to unravel with his exhortations. The economic thread is that too much credit, regardless of to whom it is advanced, is stoking an economy that he is trying to dampen down. so contributing to inflation. The social thread is that the wrong people are being encouraged to borrow amounts which they cannot afford to buy goods they do not need.

On several occasions, he has referred to the distaste which many people feel for indiscriminate marketing of credit through mailshots, which suggests a concern for the social consequences of over-borrowing. If that is his main worry, then steps need to be taken to control the methods used to market credit. Controls are strict on the selling of investments, are being tightened for timeshare, and could be seen as draconian in the case of insurance. In credit, so long as the lender quotes the proper APR in the right size typeface, few further questions are asked.

On the other hand, if our

DAVID BREWERTON chancellor is primarily concerned above ground and as far as that growth of credit is upsetting possible in the hands of his dead-reckoning on the economy, the steps he needs to take are towards the Bank of England. The volume of lending, at least through the banking system, could be regulated through deposit requirements, without necessarily getting into the difficulties posed by the imposition of the notorious "corset" a decade or so ago. Monetary base control, I believe, is the technical term for such mechanisms.

The government's theological objections to direct controls on credit agreements, on repayment terms and so on, are easily understood and in general wholly defensible. Credit must be kept responsible lenders. But that does not mean that there is nothing that can be done, and the first objective should be to define whether the problem is genuinely economic, social, or merely one elt Energy's highly leveraged £208 million bid for Carless Capel looked as if it might end in tears. But Jock Green-Armytage, put in charge last January by Kelt's 75 per cent French shareholder, the entrepreneurial Hubert Perrodo, is managing to keep the corporate Kelt shares have collapsed from spirits up. He has persuaded American Express, Kelt's enthusiastic financier of the Carless deal, to wait before demanding some of its money back. Amex and its syndicate have provided a further facility of $55 million which solves the urgent problem of how to meet a payment of £19.5 million due to the Treasury at the end of July. The payment was due when the profitable onshore oilfield at Wytch Farm in Dorset, where Kelt inherited a 7½ per cent stake owned by Carless, came fully on stream. So Kelt lives to fight again.

The Wytch Farm production plus income from Humbly Grove and Horndean, more onshore interests from Carless, together with producing assets in the US, will provide the wherewithal to service Kelt's debt burden. But Green-Armytage has to don a salesman's hat to put Kelt back on the rails.

Since the middle of last year, ll it wants is a mild change in the financial services climate "and B&C will come back." With these brave words Sir Peter Thompson, fresh from his victory for popular capitalism at NFC, took over at the top of British & Commonwealth from John Gunn in March. Brave words were thin on the ground yesterday as Sir Peter slunk away, having slipped his letter of resignation under the door at King's House. Admittedly, he has had no real role since the administrators went in a month ago. B&C is hardly in need of guidance from its nonexecutive directors on future strategy, while it is a little late for sage warnings against unwise acquisitions.

MEMBERSHIP of the exchange-rate mechanism of the European Monetary System means low interest rates. At least that is what the markets believe. It is hard to find any other justification for the in-flated level of equities, gilts or the pound.

Sterling would be extremely vulnerable were it not for rumours about full ERM membership. Britain's core inflation is still 2-2.5 percentage points above that of West Germany. On most measures, a government wanting West German-style inflation would be pushing base rates to 16 per cent. But that is politically unacceptable.

Low mortgage rates win elections. The government must cut mortgage rates be-fore the next election. But that jeopardises its counter-inflation strategy. Manufacturing industry thinks interest rates will fall soon. So manufacturers believe they can ride out a squeeze on margins as they concede wage claims if a pre-election boom is around the corner. The markets believe the ERM is the means of cutting base rates this autumn without a sterling

The Treasury's strategy is subtle. It wants to keep interest rates high and to maintain sterling's recent gains. Irrespective of the timing, the Treasury knew speculation about Britain's imminent entry would strengthen sterling. It also knew interest rates were not high enough to cut infla-

So the Treasury used a

The logic behind this entry level is to ensure a further period of monetary tightening without the political embarrassment of an interest rate increase. The objective is a sharp fall in core inflation, to about 4.5 per cent by June in favour of this, but I doubt she realised the extent to which the Treasury was boxing her into a corner. The Treasury can now argue that failure to join the ERM this autumn with a high exchange rate will lead to a sterling crisis - not the best basis for entering 1991, which could be election year.

But a Treasury victory is unhealthy for the British economy. To correct our trading imbalance we need exchange rates that are closer to $1.60 and DM2.70. A tight policy entry into the ERM is good for British inflation but bad for the current account. So, with a summer election next year, the campaign will start with inflation coming down but the current account rising.

Is this a disaster? Yes, because while the other European countries have improved their trading performance, Britain will have lived on dreams of miracles that never were. This year British productivity will grow by 0.6 per cent, the French will manage 2.5 per cent and West Germany 2.7 per cent. Capital investment for 1990 will be down by 0.2 per cent in Britain, up 5.3 per cent in France and 7.4 per cent in West Germany. On trade, Britain will show a 1990 deficit equal to 2.9 per cent of GDP. Since 1985 our bilateral trade deficit with West Germany has increased by more than 400 per cent.

Britain is still hopelessly illequipped to compete in European markets, so early ERM entry can only mean more pain for the economy.

Before capital investment and growth can approach the levels seen in West Germany and France, Britain has to solve its core inflation problem. If the ERM does not impose the necessary discipline on British monetary within the ERM.

But with EC directives about beaches and coastal discharges hanging in the air, the investment case for the sector will be blupted until the financial implications of compliance are clearer.

Drought consequences are a further overhang, though at least Southern's planned capital expenditure programme at £150 million, against £124 million spent in the year ended March, should easily be within its capabilities.

Last year's capital spend was 5 per cent below forecast because of the slowdown in the housing market. The impact of last year's drought was £500.000 and, unless the rains come, there could be a similar charge this year.

Tiphook

IT IS encouraging to find a chairman anxious to avoid participating in the Gadarene rush to Eastern Europe and Russia. But Robert Montague of Tiphook is keen to stress a non-risk approach as he attempts to shake off his rather racey image in the City.

Tiphook will be concentrating on its core container, trailer and rail wagon rental business after its battle for Sea Containers, in which it came off conspicuously better than its co-bidder, Stena, the Swedish shipping group. Out will go a clutter of peripheral businesses, including a public pump and valve maker, ac-clutch of non-executive directors to counter the one-manband image Tiphook has in the City.

Further big acquisitions look unlikely. There is a danger that overcapacity in the container market could send prices low enough to tempt Tiphook's customers away from renting.

Pre-tax profits jumped 82 per cent to £33.1 million in the year to end-April. Tiphook shares, which gained 21p to 557p yesterday, are selling at a prospective p/e of 8.5. They have risen fast since the Sea Containers deal. Growth prospects suggest they could have

PRE-TAX profits at Dacjan Holdings, the property group, fell from £32.5 million to £19.4 million in the year to end-March after a slump in sales from the group's extensive investment portfolio of commercial and residential properties.

Last time, such sales produced a surplus of £24.4 million, including £14.7 million from the sale of one office building in Curzon Street.

However, in the latest financial year the surplus on such sales declined to £9.5

In contrast, Dacjan's net rental income for the year to end-March rose 17 per cent to £14.3 million, well ahead of interest and administrative charges which totalled £4.8

The company, which is 80 per cent-owned by the Fresh-water family, now has its investment properties valued independently each year rather than every five years. This year the revaluation

£18.6 million over last year's valuation of £185 million. Benzion Freshwater, the chairman, and his fellow directors are recommending a final dividend of 15p a share

(14p) to give a total of 23p

(22p) for the year.

This would be a "first practical step", according to the IoD, in the evolution of closer monetary union. The hard ecu approach would follow the logic of economics and would not be accompanied by political changes.

Rules for franchises to be tightened.

BFA plans tough checks and audits

franchising, backed up by disciplinary procedures and regular audits, are being introduced by the British Franchise Association to improve self-regulation in the industry

The association wants to end bad franchising practice and minimise the possibility of fraud, said Brian Smart, its executive director.

The moves, starting with a review of membership criteria, are being taken against the background of a possible European Commission directive that could force more disclosure of business details by owners of franchise formats, the franchisors, and franchisees, who operate the individual outlets of the franchused business.

The BFA, which favours self-regulation, is working on details of a system that could see all its present members being investigated and checked annually.

Penalty procedures are still being studied but a franchise not coming up to standard, while probably being given

Menswear company to be sold

Five potential buyers have expressed an interest in Mr Rael-Brook's Frame Clothing since it was placed in receiver-ship early this week. A spokeswoman for Grant Thornton, the receiver, said meetings were being held over the next few days to sell the company as a going concern.

Mr Rael-Brook, aged 67, has resigned as chairman of Frame by "mutual agreement" with the receivers, she added.

The company was once one of Britain's leading volume suit-makers, trading under the Frame and Mr Harry labels, but turnover and profits have fallen in recent years. It employs 400 people at factories producing suits, trousers and jackets in Reading and Hartlepool. Mr Rael-Brook, formed the company in 1947.

Women miss the boom in European labour market

WOMEN have not shared in the boom in Europe's labour market in the past four years and Europe still lags behind America and Japan in the proportion of working age population holding jobs.

More than eight million new jobs have been created in the European Community since 1985. But most have been taken by young people entering the labour market, or by women taking part-time jobs. Unemployment has failen only gradually, and long-term unemployment has

These were the main findings of a detailed survey of EC employment rates undertaken by the commission and pub-lished yesterday. In the four-year period from 1985, the EC experienced a boom in employment unknown since the 1950s. About seven million new jobs were created, and a further 1.5 million are expected this year.

But despite a steady decrease, unemployment is still at 8.5 per cent of the working population. Mrs Vasso Papandreou, the social affairs commissioner, says this is "completely unacceptable." She expressed concern at the persistence of long-term unemployed, which has become more entreached in the 1980s. Those out of work for more than a year rose from 37 per cent in 1979 to 47 per cent in 1983 and 53 per cent in 1988. About seven million people, 5 per cent of the community's labour force, have been unemployed for more than a year.

The worst areas are Ireland and Spain, where long-term unemployed amount to 11 per cent of the labour force. Southern Italy and parts of Belgium have rates in excess of 10 per cent. Almost half the total in southern countries comes from people under 25.

The survey suggested the community will experience an employment boom in the 1990s, with the 1992 single market having a significant effect. But Mrs Papandreou highlighted some unsatisfactory treads beneath the generally rosy picture. Women are still disadvantaged and suffer unequal pay in manufacturing industries - with Britain and Ireland the worst offenders, paying women only 70 per cent of the hourly rate for men. Even in the best states, italy and Denmark, cent of men's pay. In Britain the women's pay has wors-ened relatively in the past 15

Women, accounting for 38 per cent of total employment, are often able to find only part-time jobs. About 28 per cent of those working are not full-time, although surveys show they would be, if provision could be made for child care. Mrs Papandreou said: "Statements by British ministers that women prefer part-but cannot find better jobs." The survey undermined many of the warnings Mrs Papandreou has given of "social dumping" - the threat that employers will leave countries like Germany and set up in Mediterranean coun-. tries with low wages and lower social security obligations.

women received only 85 per another," the survey said. This is because higher wages in countries like Germany are matched by higher productivity. In Portugal, wages are low, but so is productivity.

Mrs Papandreon said she did not believe a German firm moving to Portugal could introduce much higher output and save on the wage bill. :: This finding cuts the ground from under one of the main planks of the social charter, Mrs Papandreou's cherished document to protect workers from employers exploiting discrepancies in wage rates in member states. It suggests there will be no rush to the cheaper south of Europe when the labour market is fully opened, as there will be no great saving. The social charter contains provisions to prevent firms in northern countries cutting agreed social benefits in an attempt to hold down wage rates by threaten-ing to move south.

The finding will be used by many employers, and the Brush government, as evidence that the social charter is unnecessary and based on a scenario unlikely to occur.

The survey found that average employment rates are still lower in the EC than elsewhere. Only 59 per ceat of people aged between 15 and 64 hold jobs in the commu-"Labour costs per unit of nity, against 66 per cent in output do not vary much from one part of the community to cent in Japan and America."

Peat's survey shows that the effect of continuing high interest rates is spreading, affecting companies with borrowings and those dependent on consumer spending.

US airlines may link after talks From OUR CORRESPONDENT

IN LOS ANGELES

ALFRED Checchi, the Los Angeles investor, is holding talks this week that might add the Miami-based Eastern Airlines to the Northwest Airlines carrier he bought for $3.65 billion last year.

Eastern Airlines, the eighth largest in America, filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection more than a year agoafter a strike by engineers. pilots and flight attendants. A federal bankruptcy judge took control of the airline two months ago.

A spokesman for the machinists' union has confirmed the two sides will meet this week.

Pro-Fit helps Norton roar ahead

PROGRESS continued at Norton Group, the rotary engine and British motorcycle maker, as pre-tax profits surged from £324,000 to £858,000 in the year to April 28.

in June 1989, Norton merged with Minty, an Oxford furniture and property company, to gain a full listing. The Minty businesses and the properties from which it operated have been sold. contributing to an extraordinary profit of

However, the sale of the Minty business resulted in a fall in turnover from £23.3 million to £19.1 million.

Earnings per share jump from 2.1p to 8.1p. and there is an improved single dividend of 0.6p (0.47p) for the year. Pro-Fit, the company's American pipe fittings and flanges distributor, showed growth in turnover and was the main contributor of profits, making about £1 million. During the period, Pro-Fit completed its expansion in America and the full benefits of that are expected in the current year.

The rotary engine business returned to profit and the award of a prestigious US Navy contract for rotary engines for its Unmanned Aerial Vehicles will initially bring in about £1 million.

Philippe Le Roux, the chief executive, said the Norton motorcyle business showed a continuing loss of about £600.000 for the year. This was due to delays in the production of the new F] motorcycle, a high performance machine based on the racing model.

The F1 motorcycle, which sells for £12,750, came into full production in the first two months of the current financial year. The division was boosted by Norton's win in the British Formula One championship last year, as well as a second place in the Isle of Man Senior TT race, the best result for a British bike produces about 20 bikes a month, has orders for about 155 machines, having already sold 35, and the order book for the F1 stands at eight months production. This is prior to the FI's launch in America, which is due in October. The Norton Commander motorcycle has been increasingly used by the police. Between five and ten Commanders are made each month. Norton, which was once a world leader, was brought to its knees by Japanese competition in the Seventies. The future of the group, which is one of the last remnants of the once great. British motorcycle industry, seems to lie with rotary engines, which are proving some success, and the potential earnings from the patents from a range of rotary engines that have several applications.

The shares rose 4p to 50p.

United Biscuits, the McVitie, Crawfords and KP snacks food group, has become the latest target for City analysis after a downgrading of profits by Smith New Court, the broker, as well as the rival County NatWest WoodMac.

SNC has trimmed its pretax profit forecast for the current year by £3 million to £209 million. The dull spot is the frozen foods division which suffered a poor first six months. There appears to

A similar pattern has also started developing in sales of biscuits. But the KP snacks side is trading well and the American biscuit operation is also having a better time of it. SNC has lowered its profit estimate for next year by £7 million to £229 million.

P&O continued to reel from this week's profits downgrading by James Capel, losing another 11p to 617p - making a two-day fall of 32p. Capel blamed the group's exposure to the depressed commercial property market and housebuilding. Trafalgar House also the subject of a profits downgrading this week, rallied 4p to 306p.

He expects these markets to double in the next decade. Analysts have pencilled in £77 million for the current year, Encouraging profits news also lifted Norton Group, 4p to 50p, and First Technology, 5p to 370p.

Full-year figures from Berisford international, the troubled food and commodity trader, were as bad as feared with pre-tax profits sliding 41 per cent to £21.4 million, leaving the shares 10p cheaper at 81p. The figures included an extraordinary loss of £160 million, mainly from provisions on its American property portfolio.

Tate & Lyle decided this week not to proceed with its hid for Berisford, But Berisford says all of its businesses are for sale and that it is in talks with other parties about its British Sugar subsidiary. It is also talking to its bankers about restructuring its high

William Courtney, the chairman, said the company was working to achieve lower costs in its capital works programme and was forecasting a "robust and buoyant" performance in the current year.

Weir Group, the engineer, fell 5p to 292p after announcing plans to raise £30 million by way of a rights issue on the basis of one-for-five at 250p. The group will use the proceeds to acquire Strachan & Henshaw and exercise an option to buy Hophold Inc. an American group.

he worst moment of the day for the executive trapped in the company car in a long tailback is watching lines of motor cyclists weaving in and out of the traffic, leaving a trail of cars in their wake. Bikers are among the few road users who are able to run to time during the rush hour, even if their cutting-in antics cause more fistwaving than a Frank Bruno fight. This has not escaped the notice of the braver members of boardrooms, and some managers are prepared to abandon the company Jaguar and pull on their leathers to get to the office on time.

The trend was first noticed by

TCS Transport, part of Crown Suppliers, which operates a fleet of 4,000 vehicles. Bill Pinkney, its business development manager, was surprised by the number of requests from executives wanting to run a motor cycle instead of a company car.

"A lot of enquiries have come from people looking to combine, say, an 800cc BMW motor bike with a basic Vauxhall Cavalier."

The twin option makes sense for two reasons. Having a motor cycle

The director arrives: Charles Wright has found his motor cycle cuts the journey by at least half all weathers to pursue a bizarre means that the executive can cut through traffic and save time, and can also cut the tax bill on his company car by taking a smallerengined vehicle. The total cost of both items is often less than that of a large executive saloon.

The image of the biker as the hobby is changing. Charles Wright is the antithesis of that image, and an example of the trend among executives towards choosing superbikes as a way of getting around congested cities.

Mr Wright, the 34-year-old finance director of the corporate from his home at Stamford Hill to the office at Euston in central London takes 40 minutes. By motor cycle, the journey is nearer 15 minutes.

According to motor cycle dealers around the country, Mr Wright's choice of dual transport is typical of the business, now helping to keep sales buoyant at a time when high interest rates are deterring car buyers. While sales of new cars are slipping by about 10 per cent this year, motor cycle sales are up by about 6 per cent. and look likely to hold, despite the slump in high-street spending

This year Mocheck, the Honda dealer in Clapham, south London, has leased 20 fleet-business motor cycles of between 500cc and 1100cc at an average price of £5,000. Top-of-the-range models have been sold to a wide range of

Alexa Lachlam, of Mocheck, says that executives are no longer put off by being seen in motor-cycling gear. The helmet and leathers are now considered to be more a fashion accessory than a drawback. "Today people will pay more than £250 for a helmet," she $2ys, "It is obvious that executives want to look good in the company car park and be the envy of everyone who has had to struggle into work by car."

On the road again: the new Norton F1 by a 1926 18H model

Norton zooms back

NORTON, a British company that almost disappeared in the 1970s, is emerging as a motor cycle maker to challenge the might of the Japanese, who have disposed of so many rivals. Like Jaguar, success on the racetrack has proved vital for the rotary-engined JPS Norton, which scooped the British Formula I title last year. Now the company has launched a road version of the successful race bike, appropriately named the FI, and, at £12,700, it costs the same as a GTi car. How can a motor cycle justify such a price when it lacks the luxuries of a four-wheeler? Partly by its performance, as I found on the Isle of Man TT circuit.

The FI looks menacing, with its all-black livery and forward-leaning handlebars. Its 0 to 60mph time is three seconds and its top speed 145 mph.

This makes handling important for the 588cc bike, which experts claim should be rated as a 1150cc machine because of its rotary power. Little steering lock made for a big turning circle, although the low-seat height and weight (less than 30in and 400lb) helped in manoeuvring the machine at low speed.

The jockey-style riding crouch felt awkward at first. But the allover balance is excellent, so the bike can be guided through traffic at less than walking pace.

The Norton, although Britishbuilt, uses components from other countries, such as Dutch suspension. Italian brakes and Japanese carburettors, gearbox, electronics and instrumentation. Norton has billed the F1 as a Porsche of the biking world, a comparison that underlines the standards of the machine.

A new car for under £3,000

Yugo has introduced what it claims is Britain's cheapest new car. The Tempo, a limited edition of the 45A series, costs 22,999 ex-works, 2100 less than the Fiat 128 and FSO 1300.

Bike cover

BMW is offering insurance cover for motor cycles out of warranty but less three years old and with fewer than 36,000 miles on the clock. The policy, which costs £135, provides comprehensive cover for parts and lebour, provided the machine and labour, provided the machine has been maintained to BMW and 22 at Trentham Gardens, Staffordshire. All the main manufacturers from Landrepresented. Gates open 30am Saturday. Entry 25,

Ford test

■ To eliminate any bugs in its new Escort and Orion range, due for launch this autumn, Ford asked 350 ordinary motorists to carry out day-to-day road tests. By the launch, the models will have covered a combined 3.5 million miles. Ford examiners will monitor the performance continuously.

Green Toyota

Toyota is setting up specialist centres to recover and recycle ozone layer-damaging chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs). CFCs are widely used in airconditioning systems and were allowed to escape when vehicles were scrapped. The Japanese are spending £3.5 million on recovery equipment in Britein to add to 2,600 outlets world-wide.

Old racers

A 1930 Le Mans Speed Six Bentley is one of the stars of the ine-up of pre-war racing cars at the next Coys of Kensington auction on July 25 at the Duke of York's headquarters, Chelses, west London.

Rover record

Two Rover saloons have achieved a ionn-distance reliability record by travelling 52,000 miles across six continents without a hitch. The non-stop driving was done by two teams of soldiers for 39 days, 23 hours and 35 minutes, a round-the-world record ratified by the Guinness Book of Records. The cars were standard 827Si, left-hand-drive saloons from Rover's factory at Cowley.

The Drive Alert smell sensation mentioned last week is 29.95, not £4.95 as stated.

The Mahindra, based on the original Willys Jeep: ideal for the poseur who rarely enters a field

The old Jeep rides again

THE LOOK is unmistakably M*A*S*H, which should guarantee a cult following for the Mabindra 4 x 4 just launched in Britain. The CJ series, from India, is based on the original Willys Jeep of the United States, hence the ruseed look familiar from television and war movies. With a 2.1-litre, four-cylinder Peugeot diesel engine, the Mahindra has a top speed of 80mph, transmitted through a four-speed

Although the Mahindra, for allround ability, does not threaten the supremacy of off-road models, such as the Land-Rover, city poseurs who rarely see a field, let alone drive through one, will be happy to be seen in the newcomer.

Two models are available: the Indian Brave at £7.195 plus VAT. and the Indian Chief at £7,455

FALLING prices for unquoted companies — down by a fifth over six months — could mean more buyouts. This is because they can be the simplest and cheapest means of realising cash relatively quickly when the business climate forces sales of subsidiaries. These are among the conclusions reached by Ernst & Young Corporate Finance, the investment house, in a survey of privately-owned companies and privately-owned companies and subsidiaries of larger companies. Some unquoted companies are currently unable to find a buyer, according to Richard Mead, the national director of E&Y. This is where companies are in industries.

national director of EAY. This is where companies are in industries in cyclical downturns. He said: "What has caused prices to fall dramatically is that far fewer buyers are now interested in companies with a lacklustre record."

Motivation through travel

By RODNEY HOBSON

TRAVEL for Industry motivates and rewards other people's staff. The company, run by Alison Moxom, organises corporate group travel and specialises in running foreign trips to reward hard working employees.

Mrs Moxom set up Travel for Industry in 1981 with a partner. They bought out the financial backers in 1984 and Mrs Moxom bought out her partner in 1988. She now has a staff of 12 in an office in Leicester Square, London. Members of the company have seven languages between them, which they find helps in working with a European network.

Mrs Moxom said: "As we have developed we started to employ only people who have lived over-seas. The idea is that they have used another language and have experience of another culture. Most of our clientele are multinational companies.

"We have an important role communicating across a wide range of attitudes."

Travel for Industry has taken on foreign students for up to three months under a training scheme. The students gain work experience and the company gets further insights into other cultures.

Providing incentives for other copie's employees is a delicate usiness. Given that 10 per cent of employees are going to come out top in the company and another 10 per cent are never going to make the grade and will eventually leave, the trick is to motivate the 80 per cent in the middle.

Mrs Moxom said: "Whatever

you are selling, there will always be a percentage of salesmen who will win everything because they are self starters." She also finds that employees take incentive schemes seriously.

"If you and your wife are known by your neighbours to have gone off somewhere exotic every year for five years and the sixth year you don't go, they start to wonder what has gone wrong."

Care must be taken to run the competition for the right length of time. A reward based on three months' sales encourages staff to sell for three months and sit back for nine. The same applies to incentive schemes for customers. A buyer who was going to buy products over a period of time could buy them all at once to

One of Mrs Moxom's customers was Allied-Lyons. That company was under fire on two fronts: as a takeover target and for bidding for Hiram Walker, the Canadian drinks company.

The Hiram Walker bid went down badly in the City, it being seen as a move to make Allied-Lyons less attractive to a predator.

Travel for Industry chartered Concorde to fly analysts, market makers and financial journalists across the Atlantic to show them the positive side of the deal.

Corporate group travel has also spread round the calendar. Apart from Christmas and Easter, August is the only slack time. It seems that whatever the rewards at work, staff still like to go away with their families as well.

Incentive to smile: Alison Moxom, of Travel for Industry

Woman at the centre for the businessman in a world-wide rush

BUSINESS centres, those workplaces with shared secretaries and other office services from fax machines to copiers, have been noticeably proliferating and one woman who has been researching them estimates there are now about 1,000 in Britain.

Gina Goodwin, who managed three business centres for a couple of years until three years ago, is currently researching the market and believes there is a gap for a comprehensive directory of centres detailing facilities and prices. She feels it would be useful to small businesses and bigger com-panies setting up a localised arm.

She has for the first edition, now being prepared, tracked down about 300 centres but expects to build up her directory over a period, probably doubling the number of entries next year.

Centres are run mostly as single enterprises by entrepreneurs who have seen a need for such services, although some chains are beginning to appear, notably from the United States.

Ms Goodwin has a number of plans to try to bring the business centre movement together including a business centre society, a newsletter, and training courses in sales and marketing.

A course for managers is being beld this month to try to raise standards in centres. A business centre conference and exhibition is planned for September 19 in London. A European dimension is also being sought by Ms Goodwin. Apart from an international con-ference in Vienna next May, the directory could see a big expansion. Through a French connection, access should be possible for details of about 2,000 business centres around Europe.

Ms Goodwin sees the international dimension, which should be extending to the United States. as being valuable for any business person trying to break into new markets. She said: "Once you know where to go, you can fly off and start business the next day with helpful advice from the business centre used."

More details from Gina Goodwin, 45 Tavistock Terrace, London N19 4BZ; phone 071 272 4278.

The first count was of having recklessly acted in a manner likely to endanger the aircraft or persons therein contrary to arti-cle 45 of the Air Navigation Order (SI 1980 No 1965) made under the Civil Aviation Act 1949, now sections 60 and 61 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982. The other count alleged that he had recklessly permitted the aircraft to endanger persons and

Two of the aircraft had taken off successfully from a playing field next to the fete and the appellant was pilot of the third.

He had chosen a different route for take-off from the other two, one which took him close to some trees. Once airborne he had had to bank the aircraft to avoid the trees, stalled and ran into a crowd of people, killing one person and injuring others.

In some cases, where it was obvious what facts the prosecution was relying on, it would be sufficient for the prosecution to charge an accused person with simple recklessness or neg-ligence, as it did in this case.

without supporting those allega-tions with detailed particulars. But this was an unusual case in which there might be several different reasons why the air-craft had behaved as it did. In the prosecution to particularise the facts upon which it relied in support of its allegations of recklessness and negligence so that the defence knew at the outset what the case was it had Had that been done in this case, the difficulties which arose later would have been avoided. The details should either have been included in the particulars of offence under each count on the indictment or they should have been provided to the defence in writing by way of voluntary particulars.

It would have been open to the delence to apply for such particulars, and, if need be, for the trial judge to order that they should be provided before

Even without application from the defence there might be cases where the trial judge himself should direct the prosecution to particularise its allegations. However it was done, the particulars should be reduced to writing so that there what the case was about.

In the present case, counsel for the defence had made no actual application for particu-lars, but had applied to the judge to direct the prosecution to disclose what theory the expert witness was going to advance, an application which the judge. not surprisingly, refused. There was no mechanical defect to explain what occurred. That left either pilot error, as the prosecution alleged, or unforeseen atmospheric con-ditions, as the defence asserted. The prosecution had alleged that the appellant was blameworthy in that (i) the take-off he selected was unsafe and he hould never have chosen it: (ii) he had unnecessarily diminished the length of his take-off run: (iii) he had performed a rolling start, thereby diminish-ing his build-up to take-off speed: (iv) having just cleared the trees he increased the angle of attack of his wings, thereby causing a stall.

That was the basis on which the jury to be discharged and for a new trial, which was refused. When the appellant gave evidence, prosecuting counsel put to him the matters relied on by the prosecution from the outset, but never put to him in direct terms that he should have borted his take-off or that his failure to do so amounted either to recklessness or negligence. Nor did the prosecutor crossexamine on that point the expert writness called for the defence. The fact that the prosecution had not given particulars of each and every act of commission or omission relied on did not of itself invalidate the proceedings. In any event, the appellant's counsel had not made a plain, direct and concise application for them to the trial judge and the appellant could not rely on failure to provide particulars, especially where it was partly due to his own legal advisers' failure to apply for them.

There was meeter substance.

There was greater substance in the defence submission that the judge had allowed the prosecution to rely on a new cause of the accident introduced without notice during the trial. had refused to grant a retrial and had left the case to the jury on a different basis from that upon which the trial had been conducted.

At several points in his summing up, the judge had focused the jury's attention on the fact that the appellant ought to have aborted his take-off and ought not to have taken off from a position only 100 metres from the trees.

But that was not the point of the case. The judge had referred to the fact that witnesses had not been asked about the failure to abort take-off and had said that such things happened in the course of a criminal case and the iury had to do the best that they they had heard.
Their Lordships did not agree. Such things ought not to happen and if the proper rules and practices were adopted and followed they would not prejudiced by what had occ-urred. The case was left to the jury on a factual basis different m the basis on which the case had been conducted and in all the circumstances the conviction was unsafe and unsatisfactory and should be set aside. Their Lordships wished to add that to their surprise and concern it had become apparent during the appeal that the appellant was not insured and that pilots of microlight aircraft were not obliged to take out which should be reviewed by the Civil Aviation Authority. Solicitors: Mr R. J. Britton.

Facts of alleged negligence Power to recall patient without evidence

The words of section 42(3) of the Mental Health Act 1983 were plain and unambiguous and there was no requirement there that the Secretary of State for the Home Department could not by warrant recall a patient who had been conditionally discharged unless he had medical evidence that the patient was then suffering from mental disorder.

The clear intention was that the secretary of state was empowered in his discretion at any time during the continuance of a restriction order in respect of a atient to recall that patient to hospital. In exercising that discretion the secretary of state would no doubt find it necessary to balance the interests of the patient against those of public rafety.

The intention of the Act was that the interests of the patient should be safeguarded by the provision in section 75(1) that within one month of the patient being returned to hospital the secretary of state had to refer his case to a mental health review

The Court of Appeal so held in a reserved judgment refusing an appeal by the applicant "K" against the decision of Mr Justice McCullough on October 23, 1989 that the secretary of state had not acted unlawfully in issuing a warrant pursuant to sections 42(3) and 73(4)(a) of the appellant be recalled to Broadmoor Hospital. Section 42 of the Mental Health Act 1983 provides: "(3) The secretary of state may at any time during the continuance in force of a restriction order in respect of a patient who has een conditionally discharged by warrant recall the patient to such hospital as may be specified in the warrant."

pleaded guilty to manslaughter on the ground of diminished responsibility. The medical evidence was that he was suffering from a psychopathic disorder and on that basis the court made him the subject of a hospital order and a restriction order without limit of time under sections 60 and 65 of the Mental Health Act 1959.

The applicant was admitted to Broadmoor Hospital in February 1971 and transferred to Park Lane Hospital in Novem-

Ever since the secretary of state had consistently and strongly opposed the applicant's discharge from hospital, expressing the view that the applicant's motivation for the offence in respect of which the bospital order was made had not been satisfactorily established and that he felt continuing concern at the pattern of vi-olence in the applicant's On March 19, 1985, a mental

Reference was made to a Mr McVey "a nursing officer with considerable experience well ac-quainted with Mr L who stated his confidence in the patient's ability to live outside hospital." Reference was also made to a Mr Sorrell, a charge nurse of experience, who had given evidence that he would "welcome him as a next door neighbour". By reason of that decision the applicant was released on April 9, 1985, but with unhappy results. On October 20, 1985 he made an improvoked attack on a girl aged 16. The next night, again without provocation, he attacked a woman aged 21. Both victims were able to escape without being scriously injured. Neither of those victims was in.

Understandably, a sexual motive for those attacks was suspected but there was judged to be insufficient evidence of it and the prosecution accepted pleas from him of assault occasioning actual bodily barm in respect of the first victim and of unlawful wounding in respect of the second. He was sentenced to a total of six years

On June 30, 1986 the applicant applied for his case to be considered again by a mental health review tribunal and that was held on December 18, 1986. tion except to vary the condition except to vary the conditions by suspending them until the day of the applicant's release from prison. The reason given was: "The fribunal is satisfied that the applicant is not from any mental dissuffering from any mental dis-order. The tribunal is of the view that it continues to be appropriate for the applicant to remain liable to be recalled to hospital for further treatment. The record went on to say that the tribunal was satisfied about those reasons because. The tribunal accepts the views expressed in all the medical reports that the applicant does not suffer from psychopathic

The applicant challenged that decision in the Queen's Bench Divisional Court on the ground Divisional Court on the ground that, having found him not to be suffering from any form of mental disorder, he should no longer be subject to any of the provisions of the Mental Health Act. The challenge was unsuccessful (The Times May 25, 1988) and the subsequent appeal to the Court of Appeal was dismissed (The Times June 15, 1989).

The applicant continued to serve his prison sentence, his earliest date of release being October 24, 1989. Facing that prospect the secretary of state issued a warrant on September 1, 1989 that as soon as the configure of the beautiful to the configure of the configure o applicant was released be be taken to and detained in Broadmoor Hospital.

: Mr. Newman contended that section 42(3) should be construed so as io accord with article 5 of the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. So far as material, that read: "(1) Everyone has the right to liberty. No one shall be deprived of his liberty save in the following cases. The original action had been brought by five companies of the Norwich Union Insurance Group and by Allied Irish Banks plc and one of its subsidiaries Mr J. F. Soden and Mi R. C. Boys-Stones, admin-istrators of Atlantic Computer Systems, on the apprehension that the administrators were proposing to continue to receive user rentals for equipment funded by Norwich Union and Allied Irish but not to pay administration period indebt ness to them (see in re Atlantic Computer Services plc (The Times June 20)).

Mr Michael Crystal, QC and

Mr David Mabb for the Norwich Union companies; Mr. Michael Crystal, QC, Mr Richard Adkins and Miss Sandra Bristoll for the Allied Irish companies: Mr Philip Heslop. OC and Mr Victor Joffe for the MR JUSTICE FERRIS said that the administrators of the company sought directious additional to those which his Lordship had previously given. The reasons for his Lordship's conclusions in that judgment were: (i) the absence of power for administrators to disclaim particular equipment; (ii) that the purpose of the administra-tion was for the more advantageous realisation of the company's assets than would be effected on a winding up; (iii) the duty of administrators under section 17(1) and (2) of the Insolvency Act 1986 (to take into their control all property to which the company appeared to be entitled and to manage the fact, as his Lordship then under-stood it to be, that the administrators had collected and were continuing to collect the end

Irish submitted that the only effect of pre-payment was to prevent them seeking payment a second time of what had already been paid. For the administrators it was contended that nothing done during a period covered by prenavment could constitute retention or use of the equipment for purposes of administration.

In his Lordship's judgment, that argument went too far. He agreed, of course, that the ment during the period so covered unless something inter-vened to put an end to the company's right to possession. The acts or omissions of the administrators were only some of a wider range of factors to be considered in determining whether there had been netrition or use, but so far asrelevant, there was no warrant for excluding their scis-or omissions during such a period.

For example, if they were to seek and obtain a court order under section 15(2) authorising disposal of the relevant equip-ment that would surely establish use" beyond doubt the assumption that end user ! rents were being collected as they became due was incorrect, that did not displace the main reasons on which his Lordship's previous judgment was based or justify making the order sought, referred to above. such as supplemental rents, insurance payments, interest on late payments and maintenance payments attributable to a per-led of retention and use were also payable.

The period of retention and use was to be regarded as commencing with the administration order on April 18, unless the contrary could be shown in any particular case. The only other approach would be to adjudicate on a case by case basis, which was rents might have been achieved; impossible in the circumstances. Liabilities in respect of periodical payments were to be treated as accruing on day-to-day-basis. The plaintiffs claim was based on section 1 of the 1958 Act and for the purposes of the application his Lordship took approximation his Lorosity most the law to be as stated in Rickless v United Artists Corporation ([1988] QB 40), which held that section 1 of the 1958 Act did give a civil remedy to performers as well as impos-ing criminal liability on persons ment between the BBC and AYE which expressly contemplated the making of records with the necessary consents whereas in Amstrad there was no contractual link between Amstrad and the potential infringers, members of the poblic, since there was always a retailer, if not a wholesaler, interposed.

tempts were unsuccessful and accordingly the plaintiffs issued But unless the contractual link contemplated infringement the present proceedings.

The claims against the BBC were (i) that it had acted as a of the rights of performers or copyright holders the existence of a direct contractual link was Here, far from contemplating the selling of records in the United Kingdom; (ii) that it was in breach of an implied term of infringement, it was specifically provided that performers' rights should be respected. That fact rendered the plaintiffs' contention that the implementation agreement constituted an infringement of their rights under the 1958 Act unarguable. Frequently, if not invariably, the making of a record of a musical performance involved the exploitation of more than one person's rights, namely, the musical copyright, the literary copyright in the lyrics and the performers' rights, which were all separate.

If the plaintiffs' claims were sound, it would seem to follow that a licence by the owner of one of those several rights to a third party on terms that the third party obtained all necessary consents would expose the licensor to a claim that he was a joint tortfeasor with his licensee if the latter went ahead without obtaining one or more of the necessary consents. That was plainly an impossible

The fact that the BBC had received valuable benefit from the licence did not affect the matter one way or another. In a BBC owned the copyright in its own recording, and had physical possession of its master tape, which it was entitled to use for its own benefit, so long as it did not infringe other persons. matter one way or another. The It was not alleged that the making of the exploitation agreement was itself an infringement of the plaintiffs' rights.

The suggested implied terms [(i) that the BBC was not to exploit the original recording of the performance by Mr Korner commercially with AYE and (ii) that the BBC was not to exploit. that the BBC was not to exploit. commercially any part of a show compered by Mr Korner with-out his or the plaintiffs' consent]; were not sustainable. However, it was arguable that the making of the digital master tape was a breach of the plaintiffs rights under the 1958 Act and of the original contract with Mr Korner that it would not be used otherwise than for the specifically permitted purposes. In the result, his Lordship was minded to give leave to amend the statement of claim so as to alicge (i) only a breach of an implied term not to use the original recording made by the BBC otherwise than for the specifically permitted purposes under the original contract with-Mr Korner, and (ii) that the making of the digital master copy was in breach of section 1(a) of the 1958 Act. The confidence back of Italia '90 was that John playing for a place in a game to Sunday will not be dissimilar, end of their involvement in reaching the semi-finals our are issued telling referees to players have on the ball is vital Barnes was simply unable to One man who has no fear of penalties

MY HEAD is ringing with the phrase: "The goalkeeper's fear of the penalty". It has a fine ring to it was it the title of a novel? A Polish film of existentialist tone? I don't recall, but after two penalty shoot-outs in two days de-cided the finalists for the World Cup, penalties seem to have become one of the central facts of life. In Turin, England lost to West Germany by a penalty shoot-out surely this is the cruellest and most spurious bit of nonsense in sport. But I do not feel for Peter Shilton, England's goalkeeper, save in a general sort of way. In fact, I rather suspect that the person behind the goalkeeper's fear of the penalty was not himself, or even herself, a goalie.

Speaking as a lapsed goalie, I had no fear of the penalty at all. Crosses, yes, terrified of crosses. Anything less than 18 inches beyond the goalline is a keeper's ball, right? It is not just physical fear, though catching a ball at its highest point involves exposing all your softest bits to your opponents. Keepers come out with their knees high when they have time and.

OPPORTUBITY. The true fear of crosses is the fear of decisions: do I go for this ball? Or do I leave it? the entire defence largely depends on a goalkeeper's reliability — or at least his consistency—in this one area.

That was what undid least. Impetuousness is as disastrous

That was what undid Italy in their semi-finals: not the penalty lottery. Zenga, the how a goalkeeper feels. A But the answer to the pen-ltalian goalie, had managed mistake from the penalty spot alty shoot-out problem is to not to concede a goal for 517 costs the match: to score is no stop all these draws, not to minutes in the World Cup and more than the competence we come up with a different piece 990 minutes for Italy all told, but in the semi-final you could see him get a fit of the flaps. Shall I take this one? Is that really such a good idea? And then Olarticoechea's cross was being headed into the net by Caniegia, and the lucky-bag of penalties was with us.

A good keeper has no fear of crosses, or of any bits of decision-making. What he fears are deflections. That was what undid Peter Shilton against West Germany. Scarcely a goal has been scored from a free kick in this World Cup, but Shilton con-ceded one: a shot deflected freakishly by the boot of Parker, looping high over his bead into the goal.

But why fear penalties?

Goycoechea, the Argentinian goalie, has gone through two shoot-outs and won botb. The way this World Cup has gone, he may have another in the final on Sunday. He is pretty cool about it all.

About his semi-final shoot-out, he said: "I thought very little", and that is always a good start. "The goalkeeper is the most tranquil person in this situation. The responsibility is on the person kicking the ball."

A goalkeeper feels awful about some goals, and feels pretty bad about most. Let us remember that this is not a position for a well-balanced person. But a penalty is as

What is more, a penalty is the only time a forward knows penalties. In a penalty shootout the game is turned psycho-Forwards, not goalies, become kicked at a penalty, but that is a rule more honoured in the breach than the observance. Referees and penalty-takers now expect goalies to move: and they all do. Thus goalies have a decent chance of making the save. It is not as one-sided as everyone thinks.

There is a skill in keeping against penalties. Goycoechea said: "Diego (Maradona) gave me some tips on how the Italians take penalties because he plays in the league with them. I choose a place I am going to go, wait until the last second, and when the ball is kicked, I go to that place and hope the ball is kicked there."

To save a penalty, you need skill, luck and a poorish penalty. Shilton went the right way for every one of those penalties on Wednesday night, but every kick was hit with great firmness into the sidenetting. It is physically impossible to reach kicks as good as Pearce's kick was saved because he blasted it too close to the keeper, and Waddle --alas, poor Waddle. He at least knows what I mean about the penalty-taker's yips.

Beckenbauer, the German coach, was very Germanic. When asked what he thought about the shoot-out ordeal, be said: "It is the regulation. That is how it is. There is no alternative." Bobby Robson, the England manager, was almost equally British: teams should play on and on until a goal is scored: "Football is supposed to be about endurance and temperament and

Spanish sorcerer's Zebra apprentice fails to win stripes

IT IS a slightly strange statistic but four bogeys piled up on that Severiano Ballesteros, for all that he has a playing record that a genius deserves, had his first hole in one in tournament play yesterday. It happened in the second round of the Monte Carlo Open on the Mont Agei course, an eight-iron sending the ball into the cup after two bounces on the 157-yard 2nd.

The Spaniard had only one regret - he did not see the ball disappear. The two-tier green at this hole is acutely elevated: it makes the shot all the more remarkable that Ballesteros could not see the bottom of the flagstick from the tee.

About the last thing he needs is the free car that is on offer for a hole in one this week, which is just as well, because he did not win it. The car is being given away for an ace at the 166-yard 12th. Ballesteros, who has performed the feat twice before, once in practice and once in a pro-am, was in solid rather than spectacular form, that one moment of sorcery apart. He had a birdie four at the 1st.

the debit side. In the end, after a round of 66, and a level-par total of 138, he was grateful for the hole in one; without it, he would have gone perilously close to missing the cut in this tournament for the second year running.

There is another piece of good news concerning the great man. Yesterday he abandoned the Zebra putter he has been wielding with varying degrees of frustration for the past few days and went back to the Ping he has been using for

Indian prodigy has an unscheduled dental appointment

161 runs behind the Indians THE Indian touring team had a momentary fright yesterday when Sachin Tendulkar, their youthful batting prodigy, was hit in the mouth at silly point as David Gower drove Raju, the left-arm spinner. Tendulkar went off with a cut lip and some loosened teeth. He will see a dentist today.

After the Indians declared at tea-time, Hampshire lost both their opening batsmen before Gower and Nicholas scored freely against Raju and Hirwani, the leg-spinner. Both of the county's openers were caught at short leg. Chris Smith, who passed 1,000 runs for the season, from the first ball Hirwani bowled.

The Indians have been unfortunate to arrive at a time when the English weather has hardly been conducive to helping them settle quickly.

Captain Moxon in control

By STEPHEN THORPE

A FIRST championship century of the season from the captain, Martyn Moxou, a fluent and finely-crafted 123, further invigorated Yorkshire's renais-sance at a chilly North Marine Road yesterday.

To their credit, after the first day's wash-out and various stoppages, and in deference to a meagre crowd, offers of light were twice refused as Yorkshire proceeded to 304 for three in 95

treated the bowling with dis-dain, driving sweetly through cover and square, and exacting a heavy toll on Afford, who later gained revenge when Robinson held a smart catch at leg slip off

The sea air is increasingly to Yorkshire's liking. They have accorded the Scarborough club year, and the 104th festival takes place in September. The burgeoning promotion of in-terest in the Headingley hinter-land is quite understandable.

Last year's two Sunday games accounted for 50 per cent of their total Refuge takings. Additionally, the ground is pleasantly situated, the welcome inconsiderable factor, the pitch is arguably the best hard pitch in the Broad Acres, pacy with even bounce and receptive to spin

The severe weather last weekend has affected its nature, of course, and heavy rain has dulled the outfield. The pitch is firm but slow, and Robinson probably over-estimated the Yorkshire to bat in overcast

Yorkshire have beaten Warwickshire and Glamorgan consecutively, and Moxon and Motcalfe are in prime form. However, their initial progress was painfully slow and only a single accrued from Cooper's first six overs while Stephenson, who has had command over Yorkshire in recent seasons, was equally innocuous but less restrictive.

Barnett reaches new record

By Ivo Tennant

HOVE (second day of three; Sussex won toss): Derbyshire have scored 363 for seven wickets declared against Sussex

IN SPITE of the weather again taking its dues in overs lost, Derbyshire scored their runs at such a rate as to give them every chance of winning today. This assumes there is no further rain - play on Wednesday was completely washed out - and there are the now custo forfeitures by both sides.

It was very much Barnett's day, although Adams made his runs, 91, even more briskly. In the morning the captain, who scored his fourth century of the season, reached 1,000 runs for the eighth season in succession. flaying a limited attack, throw-ing the bat at anything wide of off stump or pulling what was short, the ball often sent straight Larkins decision backfires rather than through the onside. Ungainly it may have been, but his timing was an adornment. All of Barnett's 31 centuries have been for Derbyshite, not tion. For Morris, it all came too easily. Having made 21 with disdain, he drove Pigott into the cover ring.

Barnett became the second of one of them being scored for England, or MCC, or even Gatting's side in South Africa

when another, attempted pull went behind the bowler, but this time off the top edge. Salisbury, who did not have a bowl at Barnett, ran round from mid-off last winter. He has established a record for his county, leaving in his wake Denis Smith, who made the bulk of his 30 centuries for Derbyshire in the 1930s. and held the calch. There was nothing in the pitch, but equally-there had been nothing by way of variety in the Sussex bowling. After that, Adams made his highest championship score, 91, from just 73 balls. This included 12 fours and a six off Salisbury It was altogether a good day for the statistically-minded. Barnett's first 50 runs came from 69 balls, his second from only 39. Nine of his 16 fours came off these. His batting then, especially when he was parmer-ed by Morris, made for as which just cleared long-off. Attempting something similar, entertaining a period of county cricket as one could wish to see.

Bowler had put on 126 with yards. The declaration came soon afterwards. It means that century taking two hours and ending when he was bowled by score 364.

The boy ace at Becker's card table TENNIS CORRESPONDENT

THERE are no prizes for guessing the odd one out in the semi-final line-up on Wimbledon's centre court this afternoon: Ivan Lendl v Stefan Edberg and Boris Becker v Goran Ivanisevic. The first three have a combined total of Open, beating Becker in four sets in the first round. 45 grand slam semi-finals between them (Lendi 27, Edberg 10, Becker 8); the fourth is an unseeded 18-year-

final. In only one way can Ivanisevic look down on the rest of the semi-finalists. At 6ft 4in, he is the tallest of the quartet; he is also the lightest and, at the age of 18, the youngest. More importantly, if he tackles his first appearance on centre court in a positive frame of mind, he should have the freest heart as

On the other hand, Becker, like Edberg, has been increasingly impressive through the last ten days and his casual execution of Brad Gilbert in the quarter-final on a court and in conditions made for an upset was reminiscent of the dominance characterised his game at the end of last year and which has been noticeably absent from it so far this year. Throughout these championships Becker has had the smug, relaxed look of a poker player concealing a royal flush. He should hold too many cards - if not aces -

According to Richard Lewis, the national training director of the Lawn Tennis Association (LTA), who is overseeing the up-and-coming British players, the answer is simple: because this country does not deserve a Wimbledon champion.

"I don't think this is a tennis-playing nation and therefore we get what we deserve." Lewis, who lays the blame for this squarely at the feet of the tennis clubs, the grassroots of the game, said. "If everybody in Britain went around asking why haven't we got a champion for 50 weeks a year rather than just for the Wimbledon formight, if all the clubs and committees started asking 'What can we do to help?', if there was a massive push throughout the country, then we might make more progress." According to Lewis the prob-lem lies with the lack of facilities made available to juniors. "So many clubs provide one club night a week for juniors. When Boris Becker was a junior be was getting two and a half hours supervised play a day and he wasn't highly rated then."

Haycock. The Sussex player scored an excellent win over the No. I seed in the second round, but then fell to the fifteenth seed, Sasa Hirszon from Yugoslavia, 7-5, 6-2 yesterday.

At the same time, Julie Pullin, aged 14 and also from Sussex, was losing to the fifteenth seed, Silvia Farina, aged 18 and from Italy, so ending the British challenge in the girls' singles.

Like so many of the British, Haycock is keeping his options Haycock is keeping his options open, taking a year off to try life on the circuit before going to

However there is a ray of hope. Lewis feels that while Britain may not be raising a champion at the moment there are a number of players in the pipeline who stand a good chance of letting us hold our heads higher in the future, come Wimbledon-time. Graf denied by Garrison

By Andrew Longmore, TENNIS CORRESPONDENT

JUST three weeks after wondering if she had gone past her prime at the age of 26, Zina Garrison reached her first grand slam final yes-terday, beating Steffi Graf 6-3, 3-6, 6-4 in just over two hours on centre court.

In doing so, Garrison has put a full stop to a number of sentences in tennis history. She has ended the monopoly of the Wimbledon final by Graf and Navratilova, who finals, and broken a run of 13 consecutive grand slam final appearances by Graf. Both Graf and Navratilova had set their sights on a fourth and possibly final meeting on centre court tomorrow. Navratilova kept her part of the bargain by beating Gabriela Sabatini 6-3, 6-4 in 75 minutes, but Graf reneged on her part of the deal.

"I just didn't play well," Graf said. "Is it a tragedy? Is it a disaster? She was going for all the right shots, she anticipated well and played a great tactical match. But I don't think she has the game to beat Martina."

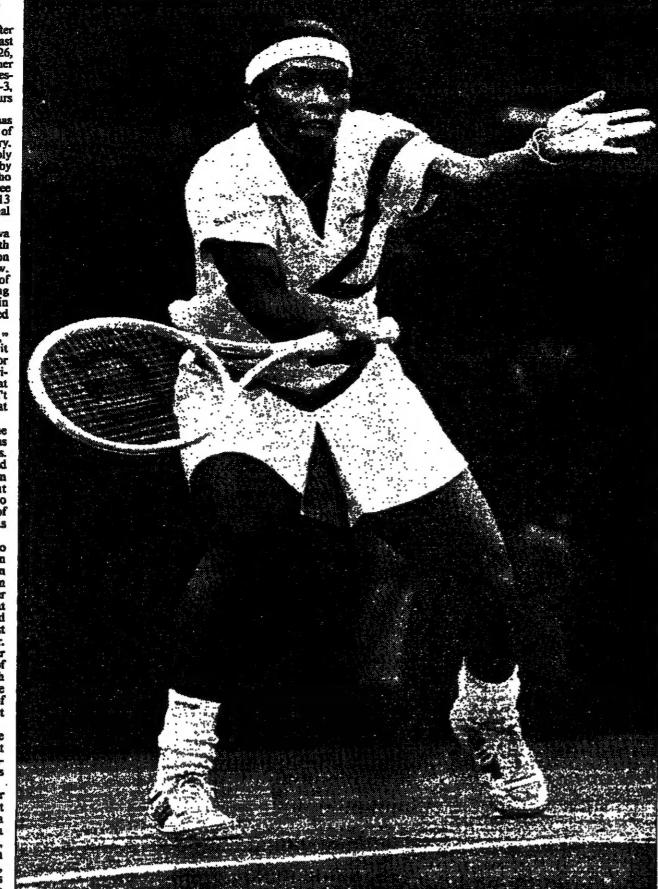

Garrison has reached the pinnacle of a career which has been full of false summits. Before yesterday she had reached three grand slam semi-finals, the first at Wimbledon in 1985, only to collapse under the weight of expectation and nervous

The doubts had surfaced so strongly at the Australian Open and the French Open this year, where she lost to an unknown West German after having a match point, that even Garrison herself had begun to wonder if her best years were already behind her. The rise and rise of Jennifer Capriati and the victory of Monica Seles at the French Open had hardly helped the cause and only the victory of Andres Gomez, aged 30, kept her going.

"I had a hard time after the French," she admitted. "But Gomez's win helped my confidence and I read all his comments afterwards."

There have been other changes in Garrison's life, not least the acquisition of a husband late last year and a new coach. Sherwood Stewart. at the beginning of this. Both were in the players' box, hardly bearing to look as Garrison indulged in a series of almost meditational exercises prior to serving for the match at 5-4 in the final set. The Texan has always been able to get to the brink of victory, but too often for the comfort of her entourage or the centre court crowd, who were vociferously behind her, she had withdrawn from the

This time there was no hesitation and the symbol of her new found resolution came on match point when she finished the best match of her life with an ace down the centre. Graf hardly moved as "It was funny. I was going to hit that serve to the forehand, but right at the last minute my racket just hit it to the backhand. I think it was just meant to be," she said.

It would be taking little away from Garrison's victory to point out that Graf was far from her best form. The forehand, which is so often the source of her strength, the basis of her whole game, was, not for the first time this year, erratic; the first serve was less dominant, the result partly of the high wind which caused members in the royal box to huddle under the blankets of Wimbledon tartan and look up anxiously at the awnings flapping alarmingly.

The sign that all was not well with the champion came as early as the third game when Garrison broke for a 2-1 lead. A change of racket had no immediate effect, Graf continued in the form of her wagtail, the American lost II points out of 12 as Graf victory over Monica Seles in second with a delightful rolled backhand, and survived the inner mental battle to gain her first victory over Graf since It is hard to tell how much Graf has been distracted by the off-court allegations about her father's private life. She was not the same player yesterday as a year ago and there must now be a period of reappraisal.

Michael Atherton was in short trousers at infant school when Graham Gooch made his Test debut on this ground 15 years ago. Gooch failed to score in either innings and a Test career which came so close to suffocation at birth is enjoying a dazzling dotage in company with the undoubted star of a new generation.

In 3½ hours yesterday, they shared a stand of 170, England's biggest first-wicket partnership since Broad and Athey put on 223 at Perth in 1986. New Zealand must already be questioning Wright's decision to put England in; on a pitch which tends to become even of bounce on later days, they may yet experience, a more chronic form of regret.

There was no pace or lateral movement for the quicker bowlers and only marginal turn for Bracewell's off spin. For a time, either side of tea, Gooch and Atherton found runs as easy to pick off as strawbernies in June. The New Zealand bowling looked distinctly ordinary, even Hadlee lacking inspiration. One began to wonder where their next wicket could come from.

It came, as was only proper, from the persevering Snedden, the only man to pass the bat at all regularly. Fitting, too, that

Robson voices a eulogy and an epitaph

A BRIGHT new dawn has broken on Bobby Robson's darkest night. And as England's manager reflected on "my saddest moment during my eight years in charge", he dwelt on the rich vein of promise which can next season be tapped by his successor, thought to be Graham.

Robson appreciated the perverse irony of Wednesday night's defeat here by West Germany. The last meaningful international of his career was both "the most disappointing and the most satisfying".

Before losing the World Cup semi-final on penalties, his side had more than matched West Germany, who will probably be crowned as the champions on Sunday night. In a side which has redeemed the nation's reputation, he has over the past month watched the dev-elopment of five individuals who could become world-class players.

As he reluctantly approaches the end of his own term, he is consoled in the knowledge that he has built a firm foundation for the future. It lies principally at the feet of Gascoigne. His talent has never been in question but many observ-ers doubted whether the tempera-mental youngster could step on to the biggest stage and play a leading

More than anyone, he surpassed all expectations and, in the words of Don Howe, "the world is his oyster." The assessment of England's coach was emphasised by Robson. He has had six consecutive very good games. He has probably been the best young player in the tournament and, if he can learn to balance joviality with seriousness, he will have it all. He is one of the finest English players to emerge for

"He needs to iron out a few things." Robson said. "He could release the ball quicker, for instance, but he has a terrific future. He is on the trail of something unique. He is different from anybody else, that's for sure, and I'll be sorry to be leaving him, but the next manager has a great player.

"He showed not a shred of apprehension, anxiety or nerves before the semi-final. He couldn't wait for it to begin. When he realised that he would be suspended this weekend, he broke down on the pitch. It would have been a tragedy if he had missed the final, a

Gascoigne was on the verge of tears the instant he recognised the consequences of his second booking. Thereafter he displayed his growing maturity and stature. Even though he knew he would be unable to perform in Rome himself, only momentarily did he lose heart. "He was gone for a minute." Lineker, his Tottenham Hotspur colleague, said. "And he did well to recover."

The scorer of England's equaliser, concerned that Gascoigne might act irresponsibly, warned those on the bench to keep an eye on him. There was no need for it. No longer is Gascoigne merely a clown prince.

He may have been England's creative inspiration, but the defenders have made a deep impression in a country where the domestic game is heavily populated by security guards. Walker, Wright and Parker would not have looked out of place if they had been attired in blue white.

ROBSON'S RECORD WITH ENGLAND

Of 94 matches played since Robson's appointment in 1982, England have won 47, drawn 29 and lost 18. 153 goals have been scored, 58 conceded. On 54 occasions, no goals have been conceded. England have been held scoreless in 27 matches.
Robson used 86 players, giving 64 their first appearances. They include seven goalkeepers (4 new caps), 16 full backs (13), 11 central delenders (7), 20 forwards (16) and 8 wingers (5). Best winst: 9-0 v Luxembourg (Dec 1962); 8-0 v Turkey (Nov 1984, Oct 1987). Longest winning sequence: skx (Egypt, Israel, Soviet Union, Scotland, Mexico and Canada) between June 1965 and May 1966. Longest unbeaten sequence: 17 (Sept 1988 to May 1990). "Parker is a great defender. He can play at left back, right back, in the middle, as a sweeper or as a field marker." He came thinking that be would be no more than a substitute and he started in all but the first tie against the Republic of Ireland. Platt's introduction was more gradual but the scorer of the winner
